A rather common superstition of that the falling of a portrait from the wall where it is hanging portends a death in the family. Some even go so far as to regard as unlucky the accidental dropping of a photograph of a friend or relation. This is really traceable to the connection which the primitive mind established between the symbol and what is represented, an idea which found one phase of its expression in found one phase of its expression in the belief of an intimate connection between a person and his image. If a symbol of one of the gods ac-quired a reverence and half-worship from its close connection with the immortal it represented, was it not natural to suppose that a more or less intimate connection existed between a person and his "counterfeit presentment?" It was this idea that caused the necromancers of the middle ages to "get square" with the enemies of themselves or their patrons by making a rag doll to This property consists of three 6room cottages and a two-story frame
