CHAPTER V.

Jimmy Rabbit Can't Wait.

After telling Jimmy Rabbit that he would meet him on the other side of the duck pond, Grandfather Mole waded into the water and started to wim across.

Why he did that, instead of walking around on the shore. Jimmy Rabbit couldn't unders'and. He was so amazed that he stood still and stared at Grandfather Mole. One thing was certain-Grand-father Mole could travel faster through the water than he could un-

Jimmy Rabbit was so interested watching Grandfather Mole swim that he didn't start to run around the pond until the swimmer had almost reached the other side. Then immy remembered suddenly that he had to meet Grandfather Mole over there. So he raced along the edge of the duck pond at top speed. And since he was a very fast runner for short distances-he met Grandfather Mole just as the old chap was crawling up the bank.

"There!" Grandfather Mole ex-claimed. "I almost beat you this time, young man! If you're going to take a morning stroll with me you'll have to step lively."

Of course Jimmy Rabbit was too polite to explain that he had waited a long time while Grandfather Mole was tunnelling his way from the garden to the pond, and that he hadn't den to the pond, and that he hadn't begun to run around the pond until Grandfather Mole had swum almost red of this shell fish is its ordinary cate, line, Grandfather Mole had swum almost across it. "You don't mind staying here in the sunshine. I nope, while my coat dries?" Grandiather Mole inquired. "As soon as it's dry we'll start for the meadow." Though Jimmy Rabbit was in a Jimmy Rabbit assured him that he did, Grandfather Mole muttered that it was the strangest thing he ever heard of. As for him, he much preferred the darkness of his cool, damp galleries under the ground. And the only reason why he wanted his coat to dry was so that the dirt wouldn't stick to it.

It seemed to Jimmy Rabibt that Grandfather Mole's coat would never get dry enough to suit the old gentleman. But at last he announced that he was ready to stroll on. And when Jimmy Rabbit cried that he was ready, too, Grandfather Mole said, "Then let's be on our way! And I'll meet you—" way! And I'll meet you-"Where the clover grows!" Jimmy interrupted.

Grandfather Mole had already buried his nose in the sand and was fast digging himself out of sight. And Jimmy thought that if he must wait for him again he would wait in a pleasant place.

So Jimmy Rabbit hurried to the meadow. And as he lunched on luscious clover-tops he reflected that Grandfather Mole had a queer notion of taking a stroll with a friend. He made up his mind then and there that he would never again invite Grandfather Mole to walk with him. (Copyright, Grosset & Dunlap.)

Parents Problems

Should boys and girls be per mitted to go about Christmas Eve singing carols?

This is a beautiful and an ancient custom. Let the boys and girls do it. Of course, a responsible grown-up should be with them, and they should be warmly dressed, and the hour of their return home should be reasonably early. More Truth Than Poetry attached to the house points up is affairs, but the favorite slaves of a egarded by the best authorities on household wore light gold bands or folk lore as being a Druidical sur-vival. The superstition is peculiar to regions where Druidism once flourished and the Drudidical places of worship is exemplified by Stone-hange, made their inner circle of stones a broken, or open, one. The idea that a horseshoe brings the best luck when you find it lying with the points toward you-the sacred, in points toward you—the sacred, in-ner circle open to you, as it were— also bears upon this theory. The carly Britains probably attached to their hovels as warders against ill luck small representations of the sacred inner circle of their temples. Druidism passed but the supersti-tion survived, for a superstition out-lasts empires and religions; and when horseshoes became known in England the superstitious found, ready at hand, a representation of the ancient symbol of the broken circle. The idea that in attaching the symbol to the house the points should be up had a Druidical signification which has been lost. People now a days say it is "To prevent the luck running out."

Romance in Origin Of Superstitions
