

BRANDEIS STORES

Great 2-Day "Odd Lots" Sale of Men's Furnishings

Carry them away at season's lowest prices!

¶ We have finished stock taking; spring goods are piling in on us. We have neither the inclination to "carry over" till next fall, nor the room in which to do this. So Saturday will be the grand finale—the clean-sweep day—the shovel-them-out day.

¶ Broken lots in each department will be put on sale at ridiculously low prices. We are not taking cost into consideration. We are not taking profits into consideration. Business sense demands a complete house cleaning and with that one idea in mind we offer these 11 bargains, certain that the prices and values offered will bring you men into our stores to carry away the stock we want cleared.

The Sunshine of His Soul

Feb. 12, 1809.

DO YOU know, my boy, that we are about to celebrate the birthday of a man who had the very thing you will most need every day of your life? It is patience in the presence of bumps. Why does Abraham Lincoln "belong to the ages?" Not for his success as a public man so much as for the valuable examples he gave as an individual.

¶ The biggest thing about Lincoln was his ability to put self into the background, to bar his thought to the taunts of critics and to rise superior to the pettiness of men.

¶ Most of the able men with whom Lincoln surrounded himself had laughed at him and even when he had given them high positions they belittled him. He made a general out of Ben Butler in face of the fact that that old warrior had said many mean things of him. When Butler, out of his own spirit of fair play, reminded Lincoln that he had fought him bitterly, Lincoln said, "I know it, and I want you to fight just as hard for our country." Seward had lost no opportunity to display his contempt, but Lincoln made Seward secretary of state. Chase had assailed him in the harshest terms, but he made Chase secretary of the treasury. Even as a cabinet officer Chase said many mean things, but later Lincoln made Chase chief justice. No man was ever attacked more persistently than Stanton attacked Lincoln, yet Lincoln made Stanton secretary of war. Lincoln recognized the ability of these men and, knowing that their country needed their services, he gave no thought to the wounds they had so often inflicted upon him. His judgment of men was vindicated by the manner in which all of these appointees discharged their duty to their country.

¶ Lincoln rose so high above his critics that at his bed of death every one of them was proud of the privilege of kneeling within the benediction of his ascending spirit and acknowledging, in the very words of Stanton himself, "He belongs to the ages!"

¶ When you are tempted, my boy, to meet discourtesy with discourtesy, pettiness with pettiness, hatred with hatred, remember how Lincoln played the game. He played it so well and so true that by the very nobility of his character he put every critic to shame and with all civilization acknowledging his greatness as a president he won his finest glory through the sunshine of his soul.
