Professor Grumann Closes Series of Lectures to Drama League

By MYRTLE MASON.

Prof. Paul H. Grumann of the University of Nebraska, Lincoln, gave the last of his series of six lectures this season before the Omaha Drama League, Tuesday afternoon, 4 p. m., at the Hotel Fontenelle. The prolonged applause which greeted him when he stepped to the platform, Mrs. E. M. Syfert presiding, was more than a perfunctory greeting. It had something of sympathy and friendship in it. And the second round of hand clapping after the first, at the close of the lecture, was fully as eloquent as words would have been of the esteem in which Professor Grumann is held by those before whom he has reviewed contemporary plays this season.

The roughness, clearness, and sincerity have been altogether in the speaker's favor in his reviews. But above all has been a purity of ideal which harmonizes with the fundamental principles of the Drama League. The lectures have been discriminating in thought. They have contained nothing of melodrama. They have been entertaining, presented in a pleasing manner.

In each of the lectures, there has stood out a keynote or central theme not easily forgotten. A quick review will recall them.

Dramas Have no Audiences. Eugene O'Neill's "Beyond the Horizon" was the first play interpreted, a play contrasting the dreamer and the man of action.

Justice Pays. John Galsworthy's "Justice" a play dealing with crime under the pressure of good motive, was the next presentation. It was in this review the speaker said:

"It is one of the lasting glories of the Hebrew race that it worked out this beautiful ideal of justice. In the long evolution of this race, its prophets and seers learned that justice pays in the long run and that the violation of its principles avenges itself.

"Without giving up the solid advantages that have sprung from our new humanitarianism, we can maintain a wholesome attitude toward such old-fashioned things as justice, honesty and truthfulness.

"If we are to emerge from this chaos as a better world, it will be because of the ideals that the world has worked out will be maintained. Not the least of these is the ideal of justice, a type of justice that ennobles and does not weaken our conception of personal honor."

Women Should Study the Arts. John Ervine's play, "Jane Clegg" gave an opportunity for Professor Grumann to say:

"I still feel that the most important training that a woman can have is literature, painting and music because the arts develop the emotions and the emotions remain woman's glory and woman's strength. It is strengthened through art that woman remains an inspiration to her husband. It is through the emotions that she becomes a potent force in the life of her children.

"When we speak of the artistic woman we do not mean the woman who insists upon playing sonatas, reading or analyzing Whistler's etchings to a tired husband. We do mean a woman whose art has not killed the artistic spirit in her. So much of our music and literature has become classroom and club activity that it has lost its direct, its vital appeal."

activity is in New York, not entirely city representative of American life at its best. Instead of a thousand centers of dramatic activity, only one. Here the fate of our American plays is made or unmade, by a set of dramatic managers and a host of players who certainly do not represent our best national ideals.

Good Manners. "I have stressed good manners, for in the long run that is what really counts, for what is the whole matter of civilization if it is not a consensus striving for better manners in the best sense of the term?"

Problems That Perplex Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Broken-Hearted: Your disagreements with this man are going to require great tact on your part. As a matter of principle, you should demand fair treatment, but you need not be vindictive or rude in making your demands.

Almost Eighteen: A stamp placed upside down will mean love, and across the corner, a kiss, though it has been so long since I used this language that I'll declare I have almost forgotten it.

Perplexed Tom: Unless your publication is a "best national business-like," I would certainly make some reference to the man's wife. Anyone who knows him will be interested to know he is married.

C. C.: I do not know where the largest clotheshop factory is located. The Omaha Club members might be able to tell you how to find out.

J. E. D.: I have the name and address of "Miss Twenty" which I will be glad to give you if you will send me your name. She does not live in Omaha, so cannot attend the Get-Acquainted club you mentioned.

Miss Brunette: It can't be done. Your feet will probably remain as big as they are. The only advice I can give you is that you always wear neat, well-fitted shoes of either black or dark brown. Shoes of light color make the feet look larger.
