Nationally Uniform Rules Needed in All the Branches of Athletics

Greatest Aid to Intersectional Sport Contests

Variances in Code Often Beats Teams of Merit-Especially True in Track and Field Events.

With so many intersectional con-tests of importance to be decided during the current year, need of a uniform interpretation of rules to cover the various branches of sport should be urged by those behind the movement to bring different sections of the country into a closer athletic of the country into a closer athletic relationship.

While the national intercollegiate foot ball rules committee does everything possible to make the gridiron clear, coaches and officials must agree on interpretations when elevens of different sections meet. When Ohio State journeyed to Pasa-dena to meet California on January I, coaches and officials held a lengthy conference to determine how certain plays should be ruled.

The same is true when a midwest eleven goes east. Some points are always brought up which do not appear important on the surface, but which, through a difference of opin-ion on the part of officials, might mean victory or defeat for either

Differences in Track Sports.

Track and field athletics is another branch which should come in tage when they go east, for the reason they must start off the bare ferent, and unless a runner accusvantage when he meets runners ef-track and field championships will he held at Pasadena, Cal., this summer, and coast officials will de-termine winners in the various ed to unless the judges agree on rules interpretations before the contests.

Last year when the nationals were held in Boston the scoring indges divided points when athletes were tied for places. The rules state plainly that in all championships thes should be jumped or run off. Scoring in this meet was finally corrected when the National A. U. convention was held in New Orleans during the winter.

Why Ring Is Needed.

In most cross mais are laid on the gymnasium floors. This places a referee at a serious disadvantage. Under such condition no hold is allowed which is not obtained on the wrestling mat. In many cases one grappler may rush an opponent and secure a hold just as the other is leaving the mat. According to rules, he should be given the upper position when the men are brought to the center of the canvax, but such a ruling would not be satisfactory to all.

Wrestling bouts are decided upon aggressiveness, in the event there is no fall, if the grapplers had to actile the question of supremacy in a ring, holds could be secured without question and winners determined to the satisfaction of every one. Portable rings could be built with little expense and this should be done in justice to the wrestlers, officials, and spectators.

Ames to Meet Penn State.

Ames to Meet Penn State.

Ames to Meet Penn State.

Charley Mayser, athletic director and wrestling coach at the Iowa State Agricultural college, whose feam will meet Penn State in a dual meet next month, recently asserted he will have a ring built for these contests which will be used for future tourneys. Ames in the middle west, and Penn State in the east invariably produce strong westling teams.

Coach Schraeder of the University of Iowa wrestling team is another firm believer in the ring, as is Paul Prehn, who teaches the grappling team at the University of Itlinois.

When Chicago and Pennsylvania met for the national intercollegiste basket ball champlonship last year, certain points in the rules had to be agreed upon by coaches and officials. When the Illinois A. C. water polo team lost its national title last year to the Olympic club of San Francisco, members of the losing aggregation asserted difference in playing rules hindered them materially.

If important intersectional contests are to continue and increase in number, their life will depund to a large extent on uniform interpretations of rules, as losing avents over rules technicalities, and will confine their competition to their respective sections.
