The Unexpected Passenger Madge Was Forced to Accept.

How ever did you manage it? I gasped admiringly, turning to Lillian from my rapt contemplation of the gown upon the bed,

"My early training as a burglar." Lillian answered carelessly. "You can have me arrested if you life for felonious entry into your suitcase in my house in town for all the accessories. The dress I took from its hanger in my closer, where you had hung it."

"But you have thought of every-thing," I said, as I hastily laved my face and hands at the old-fashioned stationary washstand in my father's room. "And you had so little time this morning."

"You can do wonders if you travel in a taxi and keep it watting at the door while you pack," Lillian said, smiling. "I know of no greater incentive to haste than the consciousness of a taxi meter clicking metrily You see, I did all my orderfirst, then while the things were being wrapped-you know how long they are-I dashed out, and commandeered a taxi, flew up to the apartment, impressed Betty into service-she's a whirlwind and has often helped me pack—and was back in plenty of time to get my bundles and whirl off to the train again. Here—let me help you fast-

I had slipped into the fresh blouse she had thoughtfully brought me. but my fingers were clumsy with pervousness. As she brought the ractory fastenings into order she iled down reassuringly at me.

Unspoken Warnings.

Steady, girll" she said softly "Everything's going to be all right, Katie, Jim, the house, your hus-band, and the dinner tonight! Incidentally, let me tell you not one of them can hold a candle to you tonight if you look the way you do now. You are the prettiest thing, Madge! You have all the cards in your hands. Now run along and meet the Dicky-bird. I'll take these things back to Mrs. Durkee. have no desire to be present when he first views the debris below. There'll be an ascension worth watching, but luckily he takes it all out in altitude flying, and when he comes to earth again he's peaceful as a summer morning."

She kissed me hurriedly, and hastened away, while I, in my turn hastening downstairs and to my waiting car in the driveway, paid tribute for the 1,000th time to her tact and thoughtfulness. She not only had saved me from humiliation at the evening dinner, but I knew that she had warned me as openly as she daren to pay no attention to whatever vagaries of temper Dicky might exhibit.

I glanced at my watch as I stepped into my car. Thanks to Lillian's help, I had ample time to make the train, and I looked around for some trace of Jim, thinking that might have time to explain the selling of the house to him, and thus ward off the effect of Katie's certain hysterical appeal to him.

Mrs. Durkee's Request. But, even as I saw Jim's familiar limping figure appear at the rear of the house, and prepared to get out of the car, I saw Katie's figure fly down the rear steps and into Jim's Her hair was dishevelled, her whole appearance spelled hysteria. I heard her broken sobbing call of "Oh, Jeem! Jeem!" and with a little shiver of apprehension I got back into my seat again and started the car. There was no use trying to talk with Jim now. That must wait until much later.

My clutch did not work smoothly. and I threw the gears into neutral again. As I did so, I heard little Mrs. Durkee call a wild halloo, and leaned out of the side of the car to see what she wanted. "Where are you going?" she called, as she ran across the lawn toward the car. "Down to meet Dicky," I answered, reassuringly, "Every piece is done, Lillian is bringing them

"Ours are almost done, too," she while you are gone. But there are some things I've got to have at the stores. Eaith has the list, and she'll go with you. You can order the flowers, also, and bring them back with you if you will—masses of pink roses. You don't mind Edith's going, do you?" Was I mistaken, or was there he hint of malicious mischief in the little woman's eyes? Dear as she is, she can be distinctly catty on occasion, I wonder if she guessed how very much I did mind Edith Fairfax's presence on this trip to meet Dicky, especially as I had no idea what his mood would be when greeted me. But my response. I flatter myself, was as hearty as any one could make.

"Mind!" I said, as if amazed beyond measure. "Are you getting foolish in your old age? But tell Edith to hurry. I've only a few minutes to make Dicky's train." "Here she comes now." Mrs. Dur-kee responded, and as I turned my eyes to the graceful, slender figure coming toward me across the lawn I saw that I was not the only one who had donned a fresh blouse in Dicky's honor.

Pee-Chee-Lee

Sweet Pcc-Chee-Lee was a sight to see. With her eyes like velvet moons— A timid mouse in a pea-green blouse

And cute little pantaloons. With her piquant face and her dainty grace. And her pretty, mincing gait, She was like the maids in the pastel shades That you see on a willow plate.

But the English belles in the great hotels Had gleaming V-shaped throats. And a shining sheen of hose between Their shoes and petticoats,

And that is why, as she passed them by, That her heart went pit-a-pat, And she thought, "Dear me! If Pee-Chee-Lee Could just have clothes like that!"

So she bent her head over silk and thread And made herself a gown,

With a skirt as brief as a widow's grief And the neck cut 'way, 'way down. And forth she went with a glad content

In her glowing velvet eye, To knock 'em cold with her yesture bold On Main street, in Shanghai. But alast her dad got plenty mad, When he saw her clothes so grand

And he made quite free to spank Pee-Chee With a stern parental hand. So she burned the gown like she saw downtown When she dined at the great hotel, And her knees don't show when the simoons blow.

2-Why was Daniel thrown into the lion's dea?

3-Why are the person and the prophecy of Judah interesting? 4-Why is Isaiah sometimes called the Prince of all the Prophets?

Answers.

1—Because it is an account of those years of the Babylonion capi-tivity with which the acts and prophecies of Daniel are connected. 2-Because, having been advanced by Dariu and being a Jew, the Medes were jealous of him and invented ;

plot to ruin him. 3-Because the prophet was a remarkable type of Jesus Christ, and is referred to as such by our Savior

4-Because his book abounds with such transcendant excellencies that affords the most perfect model of ophetic poetry, and the dignity of subject exceeds those of all the ophets put together.

5-Because of the complete ful-fillment of those prophecies, a result which no human power could have brought about, and which fulfillment the entire page of history sacred or profane establishes.
