

Cold Wave Due In Omaha Sunday Is New Bulletin

Unexpected Storm From Colorado to Cast Gloom Over Central West Easter Day.

Flash! Cold wave! It's coming! Weather Man Robins got the word late yesterday. And he put on his spiked boots, climbed to the mast head of the flag pole on the federal building and hoisted that little white flag with the black square in the center. That tells the world the cold wave's on the way. Here's the sad news: "Cold wave. Temperature will fall 40 degrees tonight and Sunday, reaching 15 degrees above zero by Monday morning." "The coldest temperature will be probably Sunday night," said the weather man. Cold weather is predicted to prevail the early part of next week. Galoshes will probably feature the Easter parade in Omaha, if there is one. Snow is predicted for today. And it's not a real nice snow. It's the kind of slushy snow that follows rain. So the short skirts of the Easter gown will come in handy as little Miss Omaha trips, not so gaily, down the boulevard. And those pretty, loud-colored little garden flower hats—this is too much—they'll be a wreck if they're trotted out. "Ain't it awful, Mabel?" quoth one miss last night. "And to think, I've been plannin' on this for so long."

Thunder Is Heard. The sad news was ushered in early yesterday with an old-fashioned thunderstorm. Yea, thunder was heard throughout the night. Before noon 75 of an inch of rain had spattered itself all over Omaha. Weather Man Robins had a heart, however, and sought to withhold the sad news from Omaha maids and matrons. Preliminary forecasts of fair weather for Sunday were oozed out. But an unexpected storm of marked intensity, with its tail swinging low, too low, in fact, over southeastern Colorado, and bound straight for Omaha, caused a revision of these forecasts. Showers and thunderstorms were reported from New York state, the Great Lake region and the Missouri valley. Light rains and snow were reported in the northwest. Mercury hit zero with a bump and went on below that in Montana and North Dakota.

Even in California. And maids and matrons, not only of Omaha, but all over the country, were sad-eyed and sorrowful. All over the country? Yes, even in California there were storm warnings. But wait! From far-off Florida, from which winter vacation throngs are scurrying homeward, came the cry, "Fair weather Sunday!" Yea, galoshes will be right in style with the Easter gown, today in Omaha. And most of the parading will be done at the old home fireside.

Three Men Held for Breaking Windows Shortly after window smashers shattered the show window of the Henrickson jewelry store, 201 North Sixteenth street, at 5:30 a. m. yesterday. Officers Davenport and Russell arrested Billy Murray, negro, at the residence and Howard streets, with a quantity of jewelry in his pockets. Soon after similar tactics had been applied to the show window of the store of E. Grossman, 511 South Thirtieth street, Tom Jackson and Will Thompson, negroes, were arrested and charged with being responsible for the broken window. These three negroes have been given beds at the city jail for several nights, but recently dropped from sight. Police were looking for them in connection with the wave of broken show windows of downtown stores and believe they now have the trio responsible for the robberies.

Everybody Is Invited To Our Second Annual Furniture PAGEANT For the Week of March 28th

Evening Entertainments on ALL FLOORS for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday-- 7:15 to 9:30 P. M.

Even from the days of Marco Polo, the great Venetian sailor and adventurer in the fourteenth century, the people of the western world have been receiving the art and treasure of the East and, out of sheer admiration, they have been finding a place for it in their homes, copying and adapting it to their needs. In the seventeenth century commerce had become so extensive that art works of the east came in a steady stream to England, the Netherlands, France and Italy. In the early eighteenth century screens and tea boxes were broken up to be made into furniture, while the finer works of Chinese artisans were sent on a two to five year journey to Europe or Japan to receive their finer panels and decorations. We of the Occidental world are still adapting the treasure of the Orient to our homes. China, pottery, cloisonne and bronze, silks and embroidery work so cunning as to defy explanation, carved woodwork, quaint chests, wonderful screens, lanterns, lamps and lamp shades, pictures, woven reed furniture, and wonderful rugs, so wonderful that when a great American mill would devise "New" patterns, they search the Orient from the Mediterranean to the Sea of Japan for patterns; indeed 95 per cent of our rug designs find their source in the eastern world. That section of our pageant devoted to Chinese, Japanese and Near Eastern Art is to show the comfortability of that art to Western Homes.

Furniture is distinctly our heritage from the past, around it is woven all the romance of history, expressing as it does the ideals and thought of the people who originated each particular style. The luxury of Louis Fifteenth's court is seen in the over-ornate Rococo and elaborate fashions of that day. In like manner the classic simplicity and restraint of the succeeding regime, clouded by suspicion of the impending revolution is seen in the Louis Sixteenth furniture designs. In an earlier day the sturdy Cromwellian spirit is evidenced by the tough substantial oak constructions of the period. The work of the Adam Brothers, Sheraton, Hepplewhite and other English furniture creators of the eighteenth century all indicate the preference of those aristocratic Georgian times, while the Empire Style is so closely allied to the ambitions of Napoleon that the significance is unmistakable. In the Pageant we are showing a number of suites of historic furniture and in order that the "effect" may be heightened, people dressed in the clothes of days gone by, identical with each type of furniture shown, will be in the settings. It is hoped that this part of the exhibition will re-inspire your enthusiasm for fine old furniture and that you may love the old pieces that you have the more.

Modern homes are made or marred by the harmony of all the things that go into the rooms. The various Modern Exhibits will show happy combinations of furniture styles, floor coverings, draperies, wall paper, china, glass, pottery, silverware, linens and the many other things that go to make homes beautiful. All such modern settings will be graced by fashionably-gowned models supplied by Thompson, Belden & Co., who have gone to much trouble and who have co-operated in every way in order that the public may be well pleased with this exhibition. We particularly wish to point out that the things in these settings are not necessarily expensive, but within the reach of all who are spending money for furniture and furnishings. The whole thing is rather a matter of taste and care in selection and arrangement. With few additions and alterations the furnishings of many a home can be made infinitely more pleasing, useful, comfortable and home-like. The purpose of this Pageant is to point out these things, and the public is asked to remember that further personal advice will be given JUST AS FREELY and in the spirit of this Pageant, AS A SERVICE.
