Intelligent Men.

This movement was begun by inelligent men, some of them conducors and others engineers. They have been saying to their associates that they believe it would be of benefit to the country, to business and ultimately of benefit to themselves if they were to represent to he railway management that they believe it would be of benefit to the country, to business and ultimately of benefit to themselves if they were to represent to the railway manageent that they realize that the purchasing powers of the dollar has inreased and that while they have been receiving wages or salaries es-tablished at the time of the war, nevertheless they feel that now it may be the better part for them to say that the time has come when it could not be said of railway employes that they alone continue to ployes that they alone continue to receive warfime pay.

There men look at the matter from two points of view. One refers to the advantage it would be to organized labor if it should now come forward and say that it is willing to accept reduced wages based probably upon the increased earning power of the dollar. Action of that kind would do much probably to bring to the labor organizations the highly favorable consideration of the public.
