Kitchen Scissors

In nearly every kitchen table drawer one is likely to find a rather disreputable looking pair of scissors.

They have been discarded from the sewing kit because some one broke one of the points in trying to take a cork out of some obdurate bottle; perhaps the blades no longer coincide, or some other fault has labeled them only good for the kitchen. There they are used to haggle and hack through strings on packages. What a mistake! There is no house tool that would serve so many needs as the scissors if they were strong and new.

Pastry may be trimmed successfully from the covered pie tin; parsley, which good cooks use in dozens of ways, can be trimmed and snipped quickly with scissors and the chopping bowl and knife need not be used. Lettuce, mint, celery and peppers as well as fresh beans may be trimmed by the scissors most efficiently.

Orange peel and raisins quail before the blades; while scissors once used for sandwiches will never be discarded. The filling may be snipped and the crusts removed. Canned fish, poultry, diced meats or vegetables all come under the list of things scissors will help to prepare.

Most laundry tubs are too low. The top of the tub should be about three feet from the floor for a woman of average height.

Plaint of the Guest Towel

Did you ever feel tired with nothing to do— It's what people call ennui— Just daudle and daudle your whole life through In indolent luxury? I watch my friends as they come and they go Away to the laundry and back. And I wish I could learn what most of them know As I idly hang on my rack.

You see, I'm a guest towel, that is the rub— That's really what's troubling me. I once a millennium visit a tub. Being only for company.

My friends speak of hope and of courage and work. Though at times they are frayed and worn. They ridicule me as if I were a shirk. And it makes me feel forlorn.

Because I'm embroidered and hemstitched, you see. They dub me "Aristocrat" and a "Capitalist" and a "Snob." Ah me! What do you think of that?

It is my fault that my blood's running blue. And I'm born to the purple? Say! I'm sure I had nothing whatever to do. With my birth on my natal day. —Genevieve D. O'Neill, in Today's Housewife.
