Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Troubled Bride.
Dear Miss Fairfax: Before marriage a few weeks ago my family thought the world of my husband. He in turn loved or seemed to love my mother. Since we have been married, life has been one series of quarrels.

My husband and I do not live with my family—comprised of mother, sister and brother—but visit frequently, as we are close by. I love my family, but also I love my husband. They say he is selfish, arrogant and snobbish, and refuse to have him enter the house.

If I do not go home occasionally, I am miserable, whereas if I do my husband feels hurt. PAULINE.
Time—and a great deal of tact on the part of you two young folks will probably take care of the situation. You have each other and your new found happiness together. Doesn't that incline you to be generous? Your people are—unconsciously no doubt—a little jealous. They see you in a new home. They miss you. A little humor, a little generosity, and a great deal of love from you and the young husband who ought to be grateful to the home that reared you, and I know all will be well.

Giving a Girl a Bouquet.
Dear Miss Fairfax: Is there impropriety in giving flowers to a young lady with whom I am employed in office with a number of other clerks—men and girls? There is nothing more than an acquaintance existing between us, and while I give them only to please her, she has requested me not to give her any more. Will you please inform me if there is any justification for her decision unless it be for the reason that the gifts coming from me are distasteful to her? H. E. S.

Your gifts make the girl conspicuous and cause office gossip. Perhaps the girl realizes that you don't care deeply for her and feels that it's foolish to subject herself to comment and speculation under these circumstances. Perhaps she feels that the flowers are an expense she doesn't want you to incur. Why not ask her? I can only speculate on the matter. She's in a position to tell you the facts.

And many others—in fact, almost every woman to a degree does not feel the maximum urge or the new things until she is face to face with the bright sunny days of April, when Spring is on in full swing.
