New York, April 10.- Last week's alternating movements on the slock exchange, with prices using when call money rates declined to 5 percent and falling again when money recovered to 7, proves that even in so artificial a stock market as now exists, the immediately dominant influence is the money market. But that does not make the general situation any easier to read. On the contrary the failure of namey rates to relax distinctly, nothwithstanding the huge flow of foreign gold and the rising reserve bank ratios has served to increase perplexity. The past week's signs of greater case in the Wall Street money matket, but with rates incoertheless held at exceptionally high figures for the scason, have directed attention again to the utterly abnormal character of the situation. The poling up of gold in the New York federal reserve bank, through transfers from interior banks and gold importations from foreign countries is itself a logical enough incident, in the light of past
