HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

Why Madge "Dared" a Question to Lillian. I have never tasted anything more delicious than the sausages which Marion broiled on pointed sticks over our—rather her—camp fire, and the coffee which Lillian expertly brewed. She had disdained the suggestion of Katie's coffee in a vacuum bottle as "being insufferably civilized."

pathetic gesture, as though she were warding off a blow. "Don't, Madge," she said, but the protest was a feeble one. It was utterly unlike the stern attitude she has always adopted toward even the suggestion that she should free herself from Harry Underwood and marry Robert Savarin, the famous artist, who has loved her so many years, and whom Marion adores, puts in the place of the father who treated her mother with such awful injustice, herself with neglect.

words were noncommittal, with a touch of irony. "What a childish faith in journalistic memories is yours, Madge," she said, and I knew that she had put on her mask again, and would permit no further reference to her life problem.

Being Excitable

A woman whose mother had become excited whenever a dish was broken or a leak discovered in the water pipes or the children came in with bleeding fingers made up her mind that when she had a home of her own she would let none of these emergencies find her off guard. So she began as a girl and continued, after she became a homemaker, to train her mind to detect and her will to tackle instantly the horns of household dilemmas. She trained her body also to await the commands of her mind, so that she indulged in no upthrusting of hands, of loud outcries or agonized gaspings when things went wrong.

Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Too Much Repression. Dear Miss Fairfax: "Modest's" letter and the replies thereto have prompted me to write you and ask if you will kindly help me solve my problem, or allow it to be discussed. The trouble is, I am too matter-of-fact and do not "take." I am convinced that this is a result of being repressed with a serious and shy disposition, intensified by a narrow environment. Circumstances inspired me with a desire to succeed in the business world and I "landed" in a place minus young people but plus responsibility. My home is without social activities, due to parents advanced in years, who maintain that since I have a home and my work, what more do I want. Of course, I understand their position; their lives have been all work and no play, and now, being old, company is a bother. Because of my love for them and the realization that they need me (not financially), I have stifled my cravings for friends and enjoyments. I have only a few girl friends and a little amusement occasionally, the latter, however, after much arguing.

people change their natures, and does it pay? Have they traits which offset those of the happy-go-lucky? I wonder if each one of us is chastened by some trying experience. The only remedy I can see for me is to seek a congenial employment in some other town; but, as I want to be fair, I am torn between the following conflicting emotions: The desire to "stick" to the home folks, for "blood is thicker than water," and the desire to fare forth, as I believe I owe it to myself to make the most of my life. Some day when I have no paternal roof, I will have to rely on my own resources, anyway. Which shall it be, Miss Fairfax? BETWIXT.

Now in the late twenties, when I should be "settled," I am discontented and still long for a broader horizon, realizing that a good many girlhood years have gone by that should have been more care-free and full of fun. I cannot help but feel that the Divine Plan was that we, all, should live as complete lives as possible, mingling with people, and not live exclusively to ourselves. It seems as though jolly people get so much more out of life than the serious ones. How can too earnest young

Why not master the situation where you are? Young company in the home cannot harm your parents. They will probably grow to like it. Yours is a fine letter but I see your life has been too full of repression. Give it more expression. Read some books (not too far advanced) on philosophy and psychology and try to "find yourself."

long time, for I'm now in my 68th year. "I remember when I was a child I was kept on a strict diet of lime water and milk for weeks and I have been in constant distress all these years. I suffered terribly from bloating and had to be very careful of what I ate. I became so weak and nervous I could hardly go about my household and was in a miserable condition. "About two years ago my husband got such splendid results from Tanlac he insisted on my taking it and the medicine wasn't but a little while in ridding me of my troubles. It gave me a splendid appetite and I could enjoy a good hearty meal, even things I hadn't dared touch before, without any fear of it troubling me. "Then I had the influenza and became dreadfully sick and weak, but my stomach kept in good order and it only took four bottles of Tanlac to build me up again to where I'm now feeling better than at any time I can remember. I have gained 11 pounds in weight, too, and words can't express the gratitude I feel toward Tanlac. I keep Tanlac in the house all the time now, for I know it is a medicine that can be depended upon."

The Hummel Myth

The myth of Joe Hummel as a modern St. Anthony of Padua, the benefactor and protagonist of childhood, is being revived. His friends would have us believe that he not only evolved a large part of the park and boulevard system (which were planned and mostly completed before he was ever thought of for park commissioner); but that he was also the author of the Omaha system of playgrounds. The fact is that this system was planned by playground experts brought here at private expense and put into operation under the direction of Superintendent English. English was appointed by Hummel on the recommendation of these playground experts, but the success which attended his work and the public attention which it naturally drew upon him, aroused a bitter jealousy on the part of Hummel, who could not bear to see any political subterfuge go into the store of a subordinate. He thereupon began a course of the most despicable persecution and personal humiliation, until English, though nominally still Superintendent of Recreation, was reduced to the position of a mere office and messenger boy for Hummel. Finally, with his best efforts thwarted and his force demoralized by Hummel's opposition, he resigned. In other words, Hummel, to gain a political advantage, sacrificed the best interests of the playground system, which his partisans would now have us believe he created. DR. H. GIFFORD.

Women Magistrates

Justice of the Peace Reah M. Whitehead, of Kings county, Washington, was the first woman admitted to the Washington bar and the first of her sex to be elected to a judicial office. She was formerly a stenographer in a Seattle law office and gained a knowledge of legal matters through watching what went on about her, supplemented by night study. For six years she was Deputy Prosecuting Attorney of Seattle.
