

Labor Expense On State Farms Being Reduced

Wheat Acreage Cut Considerably—Much Grain Being Held on Farms—Normal Corn Crop Planted.

Information for a series of surveys of agricultural conditions in Nebraska were obtained by The Bee from a questionnaire sent to all county agricultural agents in the state.

Like Steve Brodie, Nebraska farmers "will take a chance" and with optimistic smiles on their faces, after taking a severe loss on their products last year, are putting in big acreages.

Scotts Bluff county has decreased its acreage considerably, due to the inability of the farmers to finance themselves on the large scale in which they had been operating.

In Red Willow county the corn acreage has been lessened due to the desire of farmers to seed only what land they can farm themselves.

Johnson county farmers have lessened their acreage of all crops and are seeding the land to grass, according to Agent J. F. Purbough.

Western Nebraska counties, where the big bulk of the potatoes are raised, all report at least normal crops.

Graduates at Burchard Burchard, Neb., May 20.—(Special.)—Commencement exercises of the high school were held here.

Speeders Fined—Twenty automobile speeders and 30 violators of the parking rules were fined by Police Judge W. E. Wiggles yesterday morning.

Asks Divorce—Pearl Faulkner alleges that her husband, James, subjected her to brutality for 14 years, wherefore she asks the district court to grant her a decree of divorce.

Inspectors Named—Edward Moria, former city fire warden, and A. L. McHugh, former health department inspector, were appointed yesterday to positions as inspectors in the health department under the reorganization by the new city administration.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Reason Madge Threatened Lillian with "The Iron Hand."

I tried hard to answer Lillian's question concerning Dr. Pettit's apparent interest in Miss Foster with as casual a manner as she had employed, but I was miserably conscious of a heightened color and embarrassed eyes, though my words were indifferent enough.

"He is quite mad about her as far as I can judge," I replied, "and I don't wonder at it. She is very attractive."

I had overdone it. I saw that by the amused look which flashed into Lillian's eyes and out again, an expression so evanescent that one less used to her every lineament than I never would have observed it.

"That is most fortunate, isn't it?" she said. "You'll not have to bother about him here. He always has seemed to me such a nuisance."

From any other woman in the world I should have resented this speech as impertinence. But I knew that Lillian always scrupulously held aloof from any comment upon affairs of the heart, and that she would not have spoken as she had unless she had observed something in my demeanor which she felt called for a fillip to my common sense.

My reaction to her stiletto was prompt. "He was all of that," I said. "But I imagine Miss Foster will have him reduced to a pulp before she gets through with him."

What Lillian Intended. "She looks capable of doing the job thoroughly," Lillian replied, then changed the subject abruptly, an action for which I mentally thanked her.

"What are your plans for tomorrow?" she asked. "To investigate every possible renting prospect within 10 miles of Sag Harbor," I replied promptly.

"I mean to be in the saddle at day-break or shortly thereafter." "So early?" she replied, and I turned and scrutinized her closely, struck by something odd, indefinable in her tone.

"She was smiling faintly, but her lips were pallid, and there was the exhausted, pain-stricken look in her eyes which I had seen there once before when she frightened me by her sudden collapse in Marvin."

With the exception of a few counties where financial conditions are not the best and a very few where efforts are being made to avoid hiring labor the corn acreage is fully as big as last year when 7,500,000 acres were planted.

Yes, just so early," I replied. "But I'm going to steal out so quietly you'll never hear me, and I want you to promise—"

"Not in a million Sundays." I retorted with determination. "I'd like to take Marion along if you'll let me have her, and I'm going to extract a triple locked promise from you that you'll rest all day."

A Hopeful Toast.

There was no surer proof to me of Lillian's poor physical condition than her answer to my little speech. If she had possessed half her usual strength and self-control she would have paid no attention whatever to my ultimatum.

"Not one-tenth so much as I'll need you a little later," I struck in ruthlessly. "Look here, my dear lady, I want to tell you something. If you don't rest tomorrow I'm positive that you'll be really ill."

"I looked at her purposely with a grim, mocking, little smile. "You're talking now exactly as if the good Lord had removed nintenths of your gray matter and put the rest in the wrong place," I said sternly.

"I suppose you are right," she said falteringly. "But oh! Madge this is awful! I'd rather be dead than not able to do things as I used to do."

countered with a smile. Lillian will have ceased to breathe when she cannot make a jest over her own hardships.

"Exactly! Go to the head of the class," I retorted. "And now, as the first instance of the iron hand's rule, you will go directly to bed. I'll attend to Marion when she comes in, or rather I'll go and drag her from that fascinating cow in the barn yard."

I expect a rather strenuous day tomorrow, and I'd like to get to bed early myself. Here's a toast in this nice cold water. "To the home I'm going to find tomorrow."
