Agricultural Ad Man Accepts New Position In East and West

Alliance of New England and St. Louis Manufacturers Indicates Return of Prosperity.

Union Formed by

Makers of Shoes

By HOLLAN.

William Claffin, having learned the trade of shoemaker and having mastered as an apprentice the operation of the first shoe manufacturing machinery which was installed in Massachusetts, was persuaded that if he went to St. Louis and there established a shoe manufacturing indus-try, the first of that kind in that city, his success would be assured. Claflin's father was a shoemaker and tanner in the Boston district. He was a man of progress and was courageous enough to abandon his tanning vats and put in place of them machinery for the manufacturing of shoes. His son labored from early morning until darkness came in the W. T. IHERKILDSON He made choice of St. Louis, as

Returns to Massachusetts.

He returned to Massachusetts, leaving competent associates for the management of the St. Louis industry. He again became a shoe manufacturer in New England and gained wealth and recognition for his ability as a public servant. Massachusetts elected him governor and afterwards he represented one of the Massachusetts districts in congress.

St. Louis, following the example set by William Claffin, became conspicuous for the manufacturing and marketing of shoes throughout the west. New England gained command of the markets in the cast and these two sections dominated not only the domestic markets, but also entered foreign markets, for Americanmade shoes gained popularity in other parts of the world.

Essat and West.

Fast and West.

Following he example set by Claffin in St. Louis a very large shoe manufacturing corporation was established there, whose output today is 70,000 pairs of shoes each day. In the east another corporation, the largest of its kind east of the Alleghanies, is manufacturing 40,000 pairs of shoes a day. A day or two ago announcement was publicly made of the nnion of the St. Louis corporation with the New Engand corporation. By this union the combined sales each year reach $120,000,000. Seventy-five years have passed since William Claffin gave the initiative to the shoe manufacturing industry in the west. Today the largest representative of the St. Louis industry and the largest representative of the St. Louis industry and the largest representative of the New England industry have been brought together and there is some sentimental suggestion associated with this action because of the relation of William Claffin to it.

the largest merger or combination in industry that has taken place in a long time.

This combined industry is not to be a retailer of shoes. It is to confine its work entirely to manufacturing. The jobers, of whom there are many, some of them called very skillful in trade, will pass the shoes along to the retailers. The policy which this combination will adopt is based, first upon the view that the greater of the number of shoes that are made the greater the reduction in cost for each pair of shoes and of this the consumers will take advantage.

Quantity Production.

This new combination believes that the greater number of shoes manufactured, the greater the reduction in cost to the consumer. That is only another way describing efficient production. The corporation also believes that there should be no relaxing of the purpose to make shoes better and better while at the same time there is no increase in cost but instead reduction.

The combination has $40,000,000 or assess and is therefore independent of any financing. The policy which it will adopt will serve as an object lesson for other industries. It is the policy of the United States Steel corporation and in fact has been adopted by nearly all the modern industries that are successful. It involves the greatest possible production, the constant reduction of the cost of production, and the payment of reasonable wages, for in that way the output of elementary can, in spite of foreign competition, command the domestic markets as well as maintain and increase the markets in other parts of the world.
