

A Square Deal For the Girl

How much should the eldest daughter of the house do to help her mother? That's a question of interest in every home.

Abuse of the eldest girl occurs very often because the mother has not given it a thought. Yet, should that same mother see a beam about to fall and crush the girl physically she would jump to save her.

I am for letting each child in the family share in the making of the home. I think it is good for every child to feel that she or he has had a hand in the making of a home.

Every member of the family should be taught to take a righteous pride in keeping the home in good order. I have in mind a young woman who, in order to go to school had to agree to wash dishes for the aunt with whom she lived.

She could not join the Saturday picnic of the school or any of the other simple pleasures. Of course, she chose to make this sacrifice in order to go to school.

But take the girl whose mother has made her believe that it is a privilege to be allowed to help. Her attitude is entirely different.

She longs to obtain a place such as mother occupies. She longs to be able to be the one to decide on the color of the parlor rug, the kind of china, the silver.

Think it over, folks. Unless the child gets a square deal, not only she but the whole community suffers. And do what you can with a word or an act to keep the 14-year-old girls in your community from shouldering the responsibilities of a home and a family for which they are not morally accountable.

Problems That Perplex

Business Girl: Every time you get up and walk across the room you have some exercise. Make it a point to do that a couple of times in the morning and afternoon.

May: You gave me your weight, but no height, waist, bust, and hip measurements, so I could not answer your question intelligently.

Double Chin: Hold your chin up. You may have to be a little exaggerated in this attempt at first until you have got the muscles over their present laziness.

Discouraged: If a wagger you have one or two particularly good assets. Play them up and forget about what you lack.

Painful: The patent medicines and chemical nostrums advertised as bust developers are not to be recommended.

Essex: Being persistently tired is something to be ashamed of. You don't get enough exercise, nor enough fresh air, enough sleep, nor eat the right kind of food.

England's Woman of Tact

By EARLE C. REEVES. London, May 30.—Mrs. James William Lowther has just finished what is perhaps the most difficult long-distance task for a woman that can be found in the British empire.

There are nearly 700 members, making a vast social task in itself. She is the wife of the retiring speaker of the House of Commons.

It's a life-sized job, though in reality she belittles its difficulties. "I receive each member at least once a year," she said, "and often several times."

HOLDING A HUSBAND Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Strange Incident Which Occurred in Mr. Olcott's Office. "I'm going to ask you a most important personal question, Madge," Lillian warned, as, after receiving full directions from Mrs. Ticer as to the location of Mr. Olcott's office, and seeing that Marion was settled in the enjoyable pastime of judging ecstatically at Jerry Ticer's heels as he ploughed the corn land, we started in the car for the village.

Lillian hesitated, and I shot a swift, amused look at her. "As if any question you could ask could possibly be impertinent!" I chided. "Let me hear it."

"You told me this morning that you were prepared to put into the place the entire amount your father had given you, and which you have not yet touched," she said. "Do you mind telling me what the sum is?"

"A trifle over $4,000," I replied promptly. "I have it at interest, so I can't say exactly what the total amount is now, but that approximates it."

"No, in a checking account, which I never touch, and which, of course, draws interest." "Then you can get it at a day's notice?" "Yes, of course."

"Thank you. Believe me, dear, I have a good reason for asking. And if I should strike into the conversation today—I won't unless I really think I'm needed—take my cue, will you? I don't think you can mistake it."

"I'll be listening with both ears," I promised sincerely. "I don't think I ever felt the need of a strong right arm as I do now."

"What Can I Do for You?" "Don't let him bluff you, and let him do the setting of prices. Don't offer him anything or be too anxious, that's the only secret," she replied encouragingly, and I tried desperately to remember her advice when we had reached the village, parked the car, and had entered the dingy room marked "Olcott, Real Estate."

Mr. Olcott, a weazened little man with blinking eyes, whose age might have been any year from 60 to 90, rose from his chair in the rear and came forward to meet us. He evidently had been in conversation with a portly woman in her 60s, whose face was flushed with exasperation. That her interview with Mr. Olcott had been unsatisfactory was clearly mirrored in her face.

"What can I do for you, ladies?" The little man's voice matched his face. It was a sort of oily whine, and I instinctively disliked him. I half-turned to Lillian, then remembered that I was the purchaser of the property, and that in spite of her promise to assist me at the critical moment, I must stand upon my own feet.

An Interesting Interview. "We understand that you represent the owner of the property next to the Ticer farm on the old Brick-yard road," I said. "The women in the chair bent forward sharply, opened her lips as if to speak, evidently thought better of it, and sank back again. As I turned from her I intercepted a significant glance from Lillian, and knew that she had seen what I had. That the woman was the owner of the property in question, I had not the slightest doubt. What was it Mrs. Ticer had said, that she was anxious to get rid of the property? I felt as if a weapon had been put into my hand."

Mr. Olcott was stroking his chin, looking at me meditatively, as if estimating the largest sum he could get out of me. "Yes, I represent the owner," he said, then after a pause. "Are you looking for something to rent or to buy?"

"Hardly that to rent, in its present condition," I said disdaintfully. "But I might consider buying it if the price were at all reasonable. What do you ask for it, and how many acres are there?"

Mr. Olcott cast a furtive glance at the woman in the chair. "Eight thousand dollars is the asking price," he said. "From somewhere in my memory I resurrected a phrase I had once heard. I decided that it was just about the ammunition for Mr. Olcott's mentality."

"And what is the selling price?" I asked pertly. "He-he-he!" the old man wheezed, although I knew that he must have heard the banal thing many times before. "That's a good one! Well, that really is the selling price for the terms we usually have to give to these farmers around here. It all depends on what cash you have to offer."

"Suppose I was prepared to pay all cash?" I said pleasantly. "The woman in the chair sprang to her feet and advanced toward us. Mr. Olcott shook his head in a warning gesture, but she heeded neither his gesture nor his black frown. Advancing to a point in front of us she put her hand on her hips and cried: "I'll take $4,000 cash for the dratted old place!"

Natural Inquiry. A certain officer brought home with him from Africa an intelligent but illiterate Kaffir to act as a servant. One day the officer was reading when he became painfully conscious of Pete constantly peeping over his shoulder.

"What do you want, Pete?" he asked at length. "I want to ask yer a qeshban, sah," replied the Kaffir, grinning. "Well, what is it?" invited the officer kindly. "I has seen folks reading books and de like, an' I jess wants ter know which it is yer reads—de white or de black?"
