

Mrs. Nicholson Heads Amateur Musical

The Amateur Musical club, one of the oldest musical organizations in the city, closed a successful season Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. George Barker, jr.

The program included vocal numbers by Mrs. Harry Nicholson and Mrs. Herbert Smalls; violin solos by Mrs. Barker and Mrs. Conrad Young; cello solos, Miss Belle Von Mansfield and piano numbers by Mrs. A. W. Gordon and Miss Helen Smalls.

Following the program a business meeting was held. Mrs. George McIntyre of La Jolla, Cal., formerly of Omaha and a charter member of the club was chosen honorary president and Mrs. Harry Nicholson was elected president.

A committee, including Mrs. Conrad Young and Miss Helen Smalls, was appointed to arrange the program for next year's work. The club, which was organized by the late Mrs. H. P. Whitmore 14 years ago, elected officers Wednesday for the first time in its history. During Mrs. Whitmore's lifetime she was its only executive and after her death her daughter, Miss Eugenie, now Mrs. William Dinkins of Chicago, took the leadership at the request of the members of the organization.

The membership of the club, which is limited to 15, includes Mesdames William McIntyre of La Jolla, Cal.; Harry Nicholson, William Dinkins of Chicago, E. A. Baird, George Barker, Jr., Conrad Young, A. W. Gordon, Herbert Smalls, A. I. Row, Harry Steele, J. A. C. Kennedy, William Schnorr, Walter Silver and the Misses Belle Von Mansfield and Helen Smalls.

Mrs. Valery White of Hollywood, Cal., formerly Miss Gretchen McConnell of this city, is a former member and was a guest of the club at the meeting Wednesday. Mesdames Sam Caldwell, Raymond Welch, who now resides in California; J. T. Stewart, formerly Gertrude Kountze, and Gilbert Hitchcock are other former members.

Here's Breakfast for the June Brides

June and brides! And to think a bride is to think wedding—all of which seeps down to "What shall the wedding breakfast and the decorations be?" Of course, June roses are always associated with June brides, but spring blooms are becoming more and more popular, until they have come to share honors about equally with the former blossoms.

The following wedding breakfast served from the daisy-decorated table would make every guest vote the wedding a success:

- Cantaloupe
Filet of Sole, Tartar Sauce
French Lamb Chops
Potatoes Julienne
Lettuce Tomato Salad
Cheese Straws
Ice Cream
Bride's Cake Assorted Cakes
Coffee.

Problems That Perplex Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Where Is Your Prize? Dear Miss Fairfax: Again I call for your help. I have been going with a young man for one year. He seemed to like me. But whenever I asked him to come to a party he would always say yes, but never showed up. He did this twice. Of course, I shouldn't have given him the second chance. But he was very good to me outside of these two disappointments.

HOPE. O. Hops, how can you have so little pride? Do you want the boy to insult you outright? You ought to take his hints and leave him to the other girl.

Don't Be a Nuisance. Dear Miss Fairfax: I went out with a stenographer I admire from my former place of employment once. When I attempted to make an appointment she informed me she would write. Having not heard, I wrote, but received no response. I wanted to see her, so one Sunday night my friend and I went to her house with an automobile. It was about 10:45 p. m., and her mother informed me that her daughter was not home. I had been at the door for about 10 minutes when she came home with a friend, and her father asked if she knew me. She said yes, but did not care to have anything to do with me. Her father then ordered me to leave, which I did. Will you advise me what to do so as to see this girl again?

Stop making a nuisance of yourself. This girl has never shown any desire to be with you, accepting one invitation, no doubt, because you fairly forced it upon her. Surely you must realize how unwelcome your attentions are, and realizing this, you should have dignity enough to cease annoying a girl who has shown plainly that she considers you what I called you in the beginning—a nuisance.

Skinnay: Try to take life a little more easily. That is the hardest thing for thin people to learn to do. Rest every now and then. Get 10 hours' sleep every night. And above all, refuse to worry. Don't continue washing your face in hot water at night. Warm water is all right, rinsed in warm, always ending with a cold water ablation.

A Reader: Write to the registrar of the University of Nebraska at Lincoln for information regarding purchase of "The Cornhusker."

Mark Pleats on Skirt. A pleated skirt of wash material will iron much more easily if in finishing the skirt the folds of each pleat are marked by a knotted thread in the hem. The knot will not be noticeable if the thread corresponds in color with the material.

HOLDING A HUSBAND Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

What Dicky Suggested to Madge. Yes, this is Mr. Graham's studio. Mr. Graham has stepped out for a moment. Who is this, please. Shall I give him a message or shall I ask him to call you?

Edith Fairfax's voice, cool, insouciant, came over the long-distance telephone wires. Evidently she was completely at home in Dicky's studio, far more familiar with it—I thought bitterly—than I have been very few. Before my marriage I had gleaned from observation and reading that the wife who frequents her husband's office, studio or place of business is an unmitigated nuisance. After marrying Dicky I had made an axiom of the belief, and I have never gone to his studio except on his direct invitation, and twice in emergencies, when I could not wait to see him elsewhere.

The sound of that voice, with its assured air of knowing all about Dicky's affairs, enraged me. But an insistent little voice in my brain warned me to betray no hint of that anger to the girl at the other end of the wire. I wondered whether she were honestly, in ignorance as to my identity, or was pretending not to know my voice, either from sheer delight in tantalizing me or because she wished to gain time for thought before answering me. If she had been the Edith Fairfax of the pre-war days I would have known that there was no room for subterfuge in her girlish soul. But I was not sure of the cool, poised woman of her world who had succeeded the early personality of the Virginia girl. I clenched my fingers in my palm unconsciously until I felt the nails cut into the flesh. The physical pain strangely helped me to gain control of my anger and my voice.

"Hello, Edith!" I managed to make my voice careless. "Don't you know me? This is Madge, and I must talk to Dicky as soon as possible. So if you can hurry his lagging footsteps I shall be most grateful!"

Conflicting Emotions. "Oh, Madge!" Her voice was genuine enough in its surprise, but I could not get over the feeling that she was pretending. "How stupid of me not to know you! I'll get Dicky at once. He's just gone down the hall to Graham's studio. Where are you talking from? Sag Harbor? Why? Dicky thinks, I'm sure, that you're on your way in. He wired you yesterday. He's been ragging around all morning because he didn't get an answer from you."

Not a word of explanation of her being in the studio, instead, a subtle reproach because I had not answered my husband's message. If she had been Dicky's sister she could not have appeared more at ease. Of course, I realized with the common sense half of my brain that it was the only possible attitude for her to take, whether or not her presence in the studio was accidental or premeditated. Any proffered explanation would be an admission that she was conscious of the need for an explanation. "I received his wire about half an hour ago," I explained, resisting the impulse to make my voice curt. "So, of course, I cannot meet the folks as he wished. But I am coming in on the next train and must talk to him first."

"Hold the wire, please," she replied, with a tinge of curtness in her voice.

She evidently resented my repeated hint that I wished no delay in talking to Dicky. I heard the tap of her high heels down the corridor, had a queer, morbid fancy that they were dancing on my heart and looked through the door of the telephone booth to see Lillian gazing at me with a look of pity in her eyes. I knew that though I had been able to control my voice when I had heard that of Edith Fairfax my face must have betrayed the tenseness of my emotion to so close and loving an observer of me as Lillian.

Madge Wins Control. That she had not intended me to see her compassion I knew by the swiftness with which the expression of her eyes changed when they met mine. Of course, she had heard every word. I have such a horror of the close air of a telephone booth that I rarely close the door tightly, and Lillian stood just outside it. But there was no hint of her knowledge in her voice or manner as she spoke to me. "Can you get him?" she asked, casually. "He'll be here in a minute," I replied, with equal nonchalance. "Edith has gone to call him."

The little colloquy, with Lillian's patient effort to ignore my emotion, curiously enough bolstered my courage to the point—which, incidentally, I had been afraid I could not reach—where I was able to reply cheerily, and with every appearance of composure, to Dicky's excited voice when he reached the telephone.

"For the love of Mike! Where are you?" he demanded. "Why didn't you come in this morning?" So Edith had told him nothing but the bare fact that I was at the telephone. I explained the non-arrival of the telegram and announced my intention of coming in on the afternoon train.

"What do you want to do that for?" Dicky queried crossly. "All I wanted you for was to take them on out there on the 4 o'clock train. I suppose I'll have to do it myself now. Have you got a house yet? If you have, why couldn't we stay there tonight? You could rustle in enough furniture from some firm. Mother wires that she saw in the papers there was a case or two of scarlet fever in New York, so she says we mustn't leave the station, but go right on out to Long Island." (Continued Tomorrow.)
