

House-Cleaning Made Easier.

It is no one individual detail of the work of house-cleaning that usually worries the housewife. It is the aggregate mass of details—the task viewed in its intricacy as a whole that takes your breath away.

Much can be done to make house-cleaning less terrifying if you will but take time to separate each room that must be cleaned into its component parts, then list for each room just exactly what has to be done in that room. Make up lists of this sort for each room in your house.

You will find that when you have made out these lists that a good many of the things can be done before the actual house-cleaning is under way. Some of the things, if taken separately, are pleasant tasks enough, and some of the tasks that might be done in the evening. Moreover if there are children in the house you may find that there are children's tasks or tasks that grandmother will delight to do.

Once you have each one of the rooms listed in this way with a little note after each task as to how and when you expect to have it accomplished you may see that there are not a great many really hard parts after all.

Take an extract from one housewife's list of house-cleaning tasks. The room in question is that of the small son of the family, aged 3. It is a small room, but has not been "house-cleaned" since a year ago.

Closet: Washed out thoroughly. Shelves painted white. More hooks put up for clothes.

Crib: Mattress taken out doors and aired thoroughly. Cleaned with vacuum cleaner. Frame painted orenameled white.

Lounge: Cleaned with vacuum cleaner. Cover washed.

Rug: Taken on side porch and scrubbed. Ends mended.

Bureau drawers: Take out all winter clothes and pack in trunk.

What's What

By HELEN DECIE

An ambitious debutante once asked Sydney Smith how she might learn to become "a charming woman of society."

"There is one sure and short way," advised that witty philosopher. "Listen."

The girl waited a few minutes, then asked, "Well, what is the way?"

"That's all. Listen."

Some girls fear that they are not sufficiently entertaining unless they keep up a constant chatter. As a matter of fact "the rare and precious race of charmers" have always been intelligent listeners rather than incessant talkers. The observation of a famous French aristocrat (the Duc de Noailles) is an apt illustration of this point: "When you left Mme. de Stael you felt that she talked better than any woman living, but when you left Mme. Recamier you knew that you had talked better than you ever had done before in your life."

The girl who learns to listen courteously, with an appreciative comment now and then, "draws out" the best thoughts of the speaker, and wins golden opinions for her own inspiring charm—charm more potent than great beauty or commanding intellect. "Listen!"

for summer. Mend handle on second drawer.

Rocking horse: Clean finger marks with scouring soap and give coat of paint or enamel.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

The Compromise Made With Dicky.

Do you mean you're going to bring them all out here tonight?"

My voice rose in almost hysterical dismay over the telephone at Dicky's announcement. He had suggested that if I had found a house I could "rustle in some furniture" so that the family could stay in it. A vision of the ruin which I had just bought flashed before me, and one more mirth-provoking still, that of my august mother-in-law's face if I should escort her to a room in it.

"Why, of course!" Dicky's voice ascended the vocal scale now, but in anger. "What's the matter? Haven't you found a house? You've been there two days."

The delicious masculinity of this helped to keep my own anger down. Besides, I knew that Dicky, angry, was apt to rush into one of his rages, and I was most uncomfortably conscious that if Edith Fairfax were not actually at his elbow, she was sufficiently near him to understand every inflection of his voice, every expression of his face. No matter what it cost my pride, I must placate my husband, at least until this present emergency was passed.

"I'll Manage, Some Way."

"I beg your pardon, Dicky," I said soothingly. "Of course, it's all right to bring them out. And I'll manage, some way."

"Do you mean to say you haven't got a house?" Dicky reiterated, but I noticed with exultation that the anger had gone from his voice.

"Yes, I have the only place to be bought or rented anywhere in this section," I replied promptly. "But it isn't habitable yet. Mother never would step inside it until it has been cleaned. But we can manage nicely, nevertheless. Tell me something more important. Is there anything more but cajole Dicky, something to do when you hear what he is?"

"Dicky, dear," I cooed, "will you do something startling for me, and wait until you come out for the explanation?"

"Why—why," he stammered. "Of course."

"Promise not to say anything out loud when you hear what he is?" I continued archly. "I don't want Edith to hear you swear."

He laughed shortly, a bit embarrassed. I imagined.

"That part of it won't matter, I fancy," he said. "Go ahead, shoot."

"I have $4,000, as you know, in my own account, which father gave me," I said, "and I can't get hold of it without coming into New York. Will you please bring out with you a certified check for that amount made out to me? I'll repay you when you get here."

"What the—," he began, but I interrupted him ruthlessly.

"You promised," I reminded him. "Dicky, I know this sounds as if I had gone out of my mind, but I'll explain everything when you get here. And I'll promise you something—unless you're willing that I shall use that check when you get here I'll hand it back to you. Is that a bargain?"

"Well, under those conditions I'll do but cajole Dicky, something to do when you hear what he is?"

"Well, under those conditions I'll do it," he said reluctantly. "But I can't imagine."

"Don't," I said laughingly. "You'd never guess the truth. What train are you going to take, the 4 or the 4:37?"

"Whichever I can make," he replied. "Better meet both of them."

"Of course," I said, and at his goodby I hung up the telephone receiver, feeling like a petticoated Machiavelli.

Hams and Bacon

"The Taste Tells"

Buy ham and bacon by name

There is but one sure way to get exactly what you should have when you order ham or bacon. Buy by name.

Puritan is the name to ask for and to get. It brings you the choicest meats, young, tender and sweet. It brings meats that are slowly cured and slowly smoked.

There's really no meat more delicious than ham or bacon branded Puritan. The ham is so mild it needs no parboiling. The bacon is firm, closely trimmed.
