CHAPTER XXII.

A Noisy Quarrel. One odd thing marked Bobby Bobolink's flights. He never flew in a straight course, as old Mr. Crow did, but darted this way and that, crossing and turning and wheeling, until it seemed sometimes-to onlookers-that he was sure to skid into a tree and meet with an accident. And usually Bobby Bobolink would sing with such zest while he was frisking about in the air that it was a marvel to many how he could do two things like that, at the same time, and yet put so much life into Old Mr. Crow claimed that the reason why Bobby Bobolink didn't fly straight was because he had his mind too much on his singing.

Jasper Jay even went out of his way to tell Mr. Crow that he had heard of his remark, and that he was mistaken. And they had such a wrangle that they annoyed Mr. Hermit Thrush, way over on the other side of Cedar Swamp. Old Mr. Crow and Jasper Jay were cousins. And everybody knows that there is nothing worse

The Hermit shuddered. He was not accustomed to such language. It hurt his gentle nature to be spoken to like that. But he managed to stay there while the cousins told him that such a race as he had suggested couldn't be arranged, be-cause Benjamin Bat was always asleep in the daytime, and Bobby Bobolink took his rest at night. The two could never meet.

"Perhaps," said the Hermit, "I could persuade Benjamin Bat to change his habits for once. Maybe he would be willing to stay awake some day, just to oblige me." "Bobby Bobolink is an obliging fellow," Jasper Jay remarked. "Why don't you ask him to stay awake ome night?"

But the Hermit said that that wouldn't suit at all. "The Bobolink person would be sure to sing his most boisterous song," he said, "and even beat crazy Benjamin Bat."

It was the general opinion that Benjamin Bat could make a longer large and specific benjamin Bat!" he urged the two

WHY-

Do We Speak of "Hobson's Choice?"

As used at the present time, this is a satirical expression indicative of a "choice" when there is only one thing to choose, but the phrase itself dates back to the days of Charles I.

of England, when a man named To-bias Hobson kept a livery stable at Hobson was famous in his days as the proprietor of more than two score of the finest horses in the kingdom, but his method of handling his customers was unique in the ex-treme. Anyone who wen to Hob-son's, had the privilege of looking over all the horses in the stable, and, theoretically at least, picking out the one which he wished to ride. But Hobson would suggest that it would the best to take the animal closest to the door, and if the suggestion did not meet with approval, it was transferred into an order. In other words, it was that horse or none at all, for Hobson wished to make sure that all his steeds received an equal amount of work, and as soon as one horse was hired, the others would be moved up, and "Hobson's choice" would be ready for the next patron. In time, the fame of the livery stable proprietor and his clever scheme for foisting his own selection upon customers, spread throughout England, and the phrase "Hobson's choice" came to be a synonym for 'no choice
