Booze Bought on Credit in Omaha Taken to Lincoln

Operations of Alleged Liquor Ring Told by One of Members at Hearing in Federal Court.

Buying whisky on credit is the atest wrinkle in this Volsteadean

At least Glen Elmer Martz of Linoln, star witness for state and fedsral officers in their case against alleged members of an "Omaha-Lincoln liquor ring," testified the joy beverage could be purchased here without immediately producing the required amount of lucre, while on the stand in federal court yesterday. Martz said he came to Omaha more than a week ago looking for a job. He looked up his old friend, Charles Andrews, and after dancing about a bit they decided liquor was what they wanted, he said. "We went to Jay William O'Hearn and he told us he knew where we could get the stuff on time," said Martz.

Martz admitted he became so in toxicated he was forced to lie down n the automobile, but testified that he, Andrews and a youth named Henderson, took the liquor they pur-chased to Lincoln in a car and attempted to sell it there. They disposed of only one pint, at $7, he said. Attorneys for Andrews, O'Hearn and Rosario Caniglia, Italian, who was alleged to have sold them the liquor, attempted to show that of-ficers had offered Martz immunity if he testified against his compan-

The three men were charged with conspiring to violate the national prohibition act. Deputy State Sheriff Moore and Federal Prohibition Officer Anderson denied they had offered Martz immunity if he testified. United States Commissioner Boehler, who heard the case, dismissed the conspiracy charge against Caniglia and continued the hearing against the other two men for one week.

HOW IT STARTED "Twas not by Afton's rippling tide, (Where Burns held hands with various lassies) That first the fatuous golfer plied His cleaving cleeks and busy brassies. The Dutch devised the royal sport, The Scots observed it, apprehensive, So grand a game, by all report,

Would be expensive.

Not till a Scot had won a cup Which brought, in Holland, one pound sterling. Did Caledonians take it up;— They stuck to whuskey, war, and curling. But when the laddic showed his pound, And told how easy 'twas to win it, The game of golf, all Scotland found, Had something in it.

They laid out links on dune and brae, From Afton's braw and bonnie bankie To where the gentle bannocks stray Across the pass o' Killicrankie, And soon the sons of Ayr and Perth, With clubs of sundry shapes and sizes, Were in all quarters of the earth, In quest of prizes.

Today if you would play the game, You learn it of some husky person Who burrs his "r's" and has a name Like McEntaggart or McPherson. The hand of golf is on the land; No power is strong enough to stay it Because, as you will understand, It pays to play it.

The custom of wishing when load of hay passes is common in the rural districts all over the country. It is a survival from that ancient nature worship which manifested itself in various cults and myths having to do with the spirit of vegetathe personification of the "kindly fruits of the carth" as the embodiment of a god.

The growing crop is Osiris, Ado-nis or Balder alive and the harvested crop the same gods temporarily dead, At the gathering of all crops-the killing of the god-the ancients were accustomed to practice solenin rites many of which, in a maimed form, exist among us today as popular super-stitions. A load of hay is a gath-ered crop—it is the body of Balder which is passing and a wish upon a load of hay is an appeal to the spirit of that god for a fulfillment of the

Those who are inclined to question the survival of ancient religions in iragmentary form under the guise of current superstitions should consider that, without considering the significance of the fact at all, we still call five days of the week by the names of heathen gods and two after the moon goddess and the sun-god re-spectively; while of the months four are dedicated to heathen gods or goddesses, one perpetuates a very ancient heathen festival, and two are dedicated to defied Roman emperors. Which, it must be acknowledged, is a rather striking example of the survival in our daily lives today of fragments from ancient cults and mythologies

Do We Laugh When Glad.

Although all the investigations of science have been unable to tell us much about the reasons why certain things make different impressions upon the delicate organ which we know as the brain, much has been learned about the way in which the brain reacts to impulses from without-causing us to laugh or cry, according to whether we are amused or hurt. In the last analysis, laughter is nothing more than the involuntary reaction to an impulse which reaches the brain either

Just as a cut or any other hurt will register its instant impression of pain, something that amuses us will cause a definite reaction upon another part of the brain and will, in turn, result in the sending of an muscles which control the throat and vocal chords. This takes place so rapidly that we are conscious of no papreciable lapse of time, though impressions of pleasure do not register with equal speed upon different brains—as may be noted by watch-ing audiences at the theater or mo-tion picture houses. Especially at
