

United States Is Swept by Record Wave of Crime

Prohibition, Driving Crooks From Old Haunts, Indirect Cause, Says U. S. Secret Service Chief.

Washington, June 15.—There was more crime in the United States during the last year than in any year since 1897, according to William H. Moran, chief of the United States bureau of secret service.

Unsettled conditions following the war, and prohibition, Chief Moran believes, are in the main responsible for the great increase in crime.

"It has been stated by prominent observers that the returned soldier is responsible for the crime increase," said the secretary of the service man. "Personally I do not like the manner of stating the situation. While it is undoubtedly true that discharged soldiers have in many instances been implicated in crime during the past year, it is incorrect to infer that there was something in the military experience of our soldiers abroad that made them criminal."

City Life Proved Bad Element.
"The fact is that the mobilization of our army brought thousands of boys from the country districts to the cities and gave them for the first time in their lives a glimpse of the attractions of metropolitan life. In many instances these youngsters were so fascinated with the bright lights, the hurry and bustle and the glamor of higher wages that they refused to return to their homes in the rural districts, or if they did return soon thereafter they came back again sought cities, often with little or no capital to tide them over till they secured a job.

Reckless Spending Wave.
As rapidly as they received their earnings they spent them, often recklessly and extravagantly, and when the armistice came and factories began to close men who had been making from $50 to $150 a week found themselves without jobs.

The greater part of them had saved practically nothing and many had cultivated extravagant tastes, and methods of living which made them unwilling to return to the jobs and wages with which they had been satisfied before the war. Such conditions naturally were prolific of crime.

Forgery Grows Apace.
"I do not mean particularly employees of the liquor business, but rather the semi-vagrant class of hangers-on who were always to be found around the saloons. In the old days the ambition of these men did not extend beyond getting a few drinks of liquor and a bite to eat now and then. Now, with their minds clearer through abstinence and with their energies undissipated, they have become a much more serious problem to the police."

Long Skirts in Vogue Again; Mannequins Wear Them in Paris

By HENRY WALES.
Chicago Tribune Cable. Copyright, 1921.
June 15.—The fact that French dressmakers have decreed long skirts because known at Chantilly race track yesterday when "Rue La Parix" establishments sent mannequins wearing dresses ankle length, although a week previously robes raced midway between the knee and ankle.

American women present declared the long skirts were a marked triumph for the American style makers, who have been striving since last year to supersede the extremely short skirts which the French created. The modern sport-loving women demanded.

Although the dressmakers sent mannequins wearing light, bright colored gowns, the chic French women maintained their black monochromatic fur or fringe trimmed dresses, the only bit of color being violet hats.

Wanderer Will Hang Friday Unless Supreme Court Issues Mandate

Chicago, June 15.—Carl Wanderer, whose attorneys have secured a stay of execution on the ancient law that permits a review of the case where a murderer becomes insane after conviction, is claiming that he hears "voices" in his cell during the night.

He was to have been hanged Friday and unless the supreme court issues a positive mandate forbidding the hanging, the jail officials will go ahead with the performance. The same rule applies to Gene Geary, notorious gunman and double murderer. The supreme court today extended Geary's stay to July 17.

For six weeks, the attorney for Wanderer told the pardon board the slayer of three persons, "has been hearing strange noises in his cell." Attention also is called to the alleged fact that he has lost weight and "has an unhealthy appearance."
