

Dempsey Resumes Training Grind After Short Rest

Champion to Continue Routine Now Until Two Weeks From Tomorrow, When He Will Quit.

Atlantic City, N. J., June 16.—After a four-day lay off Jack Dempsey resumed training today with the prospects of continuing his grind without further interruption until the wind-up two weeks from tomorrow.

Dempsey's sparring partners have taken advantage of the champion's lay off to prepare themselves for the strenuous two weeks ahead of them.

Martin Burke, the lanky heavy-weight from New Orleans, will no longer be available as a sparring partner because of a badly swollen ear. Burke will undergo an operation in New York but will return to camp as Dempsey's guest for the balance of the training.

The threat of the New Jersey boxing commission to name the referee today, whether Kearns attended the meeting or not, brought a sharp reply from the champion's manager.

"The fact that the commission names a referee does not necessarily mean that he will referee," said Kearns. "In my opinion the New Jersey commission is overstepping its authority when it attempts to fasten any one candidate on Rickard, Descamps and myself whether the selection meets with our approval or not."

"I know nothing about the capabilities of Harry Ertle, who is said to be the commissioner's popular choice and I do not care to risk the world's championship held by Dempsey in a fight refereed by a man whose ability has not been proven to me."

Paddock Jumps Club

News From Jack Dempsey's Camp

By JACK DEMPSEY, Heavyweight Champion of the World. (Copyright, 1921, by King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

Atlantic City, N. J., June 16.—A former fighter and a New York salesman wandered into a cabaret here about 4 a. m. Tuesday and demanded an alcoholic drink. He didn't get it. Thereupon they proceeded to beat up the proprietor and some of the performers, and by the simple process of throw-around loose furniture they practically wrecked the interior.

The men were arrested. That same afternoon—Tuesday—I was going out for a long stroll and the gateman to my training quarters was told to let no one in because I would be away.

My attention was called yesterday to stories in various papers which were sensational and a gross injustice. They declared that the police of Atlantic City had closed my camp because two men connected with the camp had become involved in a brawl.

False Report

Every line was a lie. Mayor Edward Bader of this city will bear me out in that. My camp was not closed by police and the two men engaged in the fight had no connection whatsoever with my headquarters. The fighter did visit my camp about 10 days ago and started to create a disturbance there. I gave orders that he be asked to leave and thereafter be kept away.

He has never come back. I want it understood that I assume full responsibility for any acts of sparring partners or officials attached in my camp. If they do any wrong the blame can be placed upon me. But I'm not going to assume responsibility for the whole fighting fraternity. If ring men come down here and get into rows my camp is not to be blamed. I have surrounded myself with clean, manly fellows. I can count on each one to conduct himself decently, no matter where he is. If I find that any man connected with my camp isn't acting in a way that reflects credit to himself I'll cut him loose, no matter how good a sparrer he may be.

A statement issued by Mayor Bader which has to do with the cabaret row says:

Bader's Statement

"The report that the police closed Dempsey's camp is ridiculous and wholly untrue. And it also is untrue to say that the men involved in the brawl were part of Dempsey's camp. The story is a weird dream by some scandalmonger and it's bunk from beginning to end."

Didn't do a tap of work today beyond a brief jaunt on the road. After breakfast I motored to Camden, N. J., to bring back the police dog which I sent to a veterinarian there. Her foot had been hurt. That's the pup who is a sister to Dr. Hemingway. Her name is Sophie Ginsberg. The mother of these dogs is a police dog, the father is a full-blooded wolf.

Unless Jack Kearns changes his mind before 3 o'clock Thursday afternoon I'll be back at work with the gloves that time. I'm scheduled to get back into harness and I certainly will welcome it. Nothing is more fun for me than whizzing through a half dozen or more rounds daily with sparring partners who can give me a real workout. And they'll give me all I want and a little besides.

Arena for Battle Near Completion

Chief Engineer Says Structure Will Be Ready Tuesday.

Jersey City, N. J., June 16.—The bowl-shaped wooden arena for the Dempsey-Carpenter fight here July 2, will be finished next Tuesday, says Allen O'Brien, the chief engineer of the construction work. It will seat 60,000 persons and will cost approximately $250,000. More than 2,000,000 feet of lumber have been used.

Grading of the ground was begun April 27. The city has put in extra hydrants and water mains for protection against fire. There will be 20 exits.

A portable ring of steel construction will be used for the battle. The work of installing the ring in the center of the arena will be started within the next few days.

The ring will measure 18 feet square inside the ropes and will have a two-foot extension on all sides. The padding will be covered with a tightly stretched canvas.

Swinging stools for the boxers will be provided. A hinge in the arm will permit the seat being dropped below the floor level during the periods of boxing.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adel Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

Why Madge Was Secretly Disquieted.

For a full minute I stood silently in Dicky's embrace, savoring to the full the relieved assurance of his approval of my home-buying venture. I had not known, myself, how acute the strain of the preceding days had been until I had heard from his lips his enthusiastic appreciation of the old Dacey farmstead on which I had taken an option.

Then came the inevitable reaction to the practical. With a little dismayed gasp I swayed back from Dicky's arms.

"But what your mother will ever say I don't know!" I gave a little shiver of apprehension as I visualized Mother Graham's face when she should hear of our new venture.

"You see, dear, things are in an appalling state inside the house. Two most awful families—ignorance and dirt personified—have just moved out of it. They've been keeping chickens and making hooch."

"Where? When? Is there any of it left? Lead me to it instantly!" Dicky exclaimed indignantly, and then, as I laughed at his nonsense, he demanded a bit impatiently:

"Will you tell me why you laugh at my foolishness, and at the same time take my mother's absurdity seriously? Does it make the slightest difference what she says or does? There are only two things she can do. One is to talk her head off, and as it is summertime, you surely can get out-of-doors and away from her most of the time, especially if you have this place to look after. The other thing is to threaten to go to Elizabeth's or Harriet's. And that probably would be the best thing that could happen. She hasn't been either place in a long while, and by the time she finishes her visit the place would be in readiness."

There was a note of cheerful optimism in Dicky's tone which I wished from the bottom of my heart I could share. But I knew my august mother-in-law in a way that even he did not.

If she were not satisfied with the house, if we went on with it against her disapproval, I would never hear the last of her captious fault-finding about it. Nothing ever would be right about it from the ridgepole to the foundation stones, and if during the discussion she got angry enough to go on one of her frequently threatened visits to her daughters, she would return with only an intensified dislike for the place.

"Have You Forgotten?"

"What's the matter?" Dicky tipped my chin so that he looked straight into my eyes. "Something's jangled the jute. Come on, spill it."

"If only mother could have found this place herself!" I wailed. "But, Dicky, have you forgotten?" I named two or three historic domestic episodes when his mother had disapproved of one of our ventures. "Have either of us heard the last of them?"

"By jove!" Dicky slapped his thigh emphatically, as inspiration evidently came to him. "I've got it! Have you told mother anything definite about the place you found or that you had planned to buy instead of rent?"

"You heard everything that was said," I returned.

"Do you think the Tickers or Lil have let anything out? I suppose they know about it. Have you told them?"

"Oh, yes! But nothing was said to mother. She was so tired, you know."

"Yes, and so all-fired cranky. She certainly staged an exhibition over that dinner. I guess it's necessary to get her into good humor or get her away pronto, else our worthy hostess will pitch us all into the road, neck and crop."

A Fear. I prudently refrained from repeating to Dicky the remark I had heard Mrs. Ticer make to her husband about this very topic. He might veer suddenly to the other side, and decide that his mother was being persecuted.

"How would it do?" Dicky spoke slowly, as if formulating a plan—"for me to tell mother confidentially in the morning that I've made inquiries of some prominent men I know out here, and that there's nothing at all in the country, then call to her mind accidentally that there are no storage facilities, and that our goods will have to be sold at auction and hers sent to Harriet or Elizabeth. "We'll be walking down the road at the time—you know she loves a walk—and I'll comment in passing on the beauty of this place, too bad it's dilapidated, they don't build such houses nowadays, etc. Ten to one she'll begin to speculate on what she could do with it if we only had it, and—the battle is won. You don't have to close the deal until late today, do you?"

"No," I said, but it took all the courage I could muster to add: "And I think that's a splendid plan, Dicky."

For, like every woman, I had had visions of building the new home as I wished it. But if Mother Graham, as Dicky had said, began to speculate upon what she would do with it if she only had it, and could preen herself upon finding it, I would have about as much to say regarding the restoration of the place as Katie would.

Dicky turned my face to his again. "Look here, sweetheart," he said. "Don't you think if I can manage mother about purchasing the house I can fix things so you'll have your way about it afterward?"

With the glamour of the moonlight and my husband's persuasive voice pervading my senses I gave an unqualified assent with my heart and lips. But my common sense feared the future.

You can take a Second Payment from any person who has made a payment on a subscription during the Help Yourself Campaign. If some other member received the First Payment and you secured the Second you get the additional votes.
