

Fault-Finding Will Kill Love

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.
Roy and Anna have been engaged for a fortnight, and the other evening he astonished a group of friends by remarking that she hadn't asked him to change a single habit or custom.

By CORINNE LOWE.
New York.—(Special Correspondence).—Fashion comes near to being an island of capes. To catalogue these capes would be like trying to list the blades of grass in the backyard. There are just too many of them.

"Hasn't she told you cigars are bad for you?" cried one friend. "Hasn't she told you that fruit salad isn't a regular lunch?" laughed another. "Isn't she disgusted at your having a business meeting every Tuesday evening?" urged a third.

"Why should I try to change Roy and his habits?" asked Anna innocently. "I'm in love with him because he's Roy. Probably his fruit salad lunch is as much a part of him as the adorable red and blue striped ties he always wears."

Every one looked astonished. "Why should I try to change Roy and his habits?" asked Anna innocently. "I'm in love with him because he's Roy. Probably his fruit salad lunch is as much a part of him as the adorable red and blue striped ties he always wears."

Let it be said right here, however, that those who are planning for country or seaside had best include one of the knitted wool capes. These have been worn all through the last weeks by people who are getting a precious sniff of sea breeze or country air. Often they are accented with check, and often still they are trimmed with angora in contrasting tint.

Practical Uses of The Dining Room

The more completely a dining room is furnished simply for the requirements of a place in which to take meals, and the more strictly it is kept simply for that use, the simpler will be the tasks of house-keeping and the better the form of the dining room.

There is a curious tendency on the part of some people to gravitate toward their dining room at all times of day. Now where one is necessarily limited as to room, in the apartment or small cottage, it is sometimes necessary to combine dining room and living room or even dining room and kitchen, but where this is not necessary then the dining room ought to be kept from the cluttering accessories of a living room. Yet there are people who have ample living rooms who prefer to gather around the dining table in the evening, do their letter writing there and take naps on a lounge in the dining room than anywhere else.

the dining room is better or because the room is furnished more cheerfully. The answer is to furnish the other rooms more cheerfully and to supply them with a better light. These cluttered dining rooms are at best untidy. They and the clutter are not conducive to a keen appetite. Moreover, if you sit in your dining room between meals then the atmosphere there will not have the clear, fresh quality that it should at meal time. The air will be vitiated.

Interesting Facts About Eggs

In some localities white eggs are preferred and bring a higher price, while in others brown eggs are preferred. Scientists assure us that there is no actual difference in the eggs to substantiate such a preference. The dark shelled eggs do not contain any richer yolks or whites. Be sure and buy clean eggs. Eggs should never be washed when they are received, as when eggs are washed they are robbed of something in the shell that helps to keep them fresh. Wash the egg just before using.

The yolk of a very hard boiled egg is often regarded as suitable for very small children. It is sometimes given to children before soft boiled or cooiled eggs. It should be so thoroughly boiled that it is crumbly and flaky and should be well crumbled.

one egg and much cornstarch does not fill the bill in the diet that a custard made from more eggs does. The yolk of egg contains the fat soluble vitamins, the absence of which causes rickets and sore eyes, especially in children. For this reason eggs are desirable in children's diet and the yolk should not be omitted.
