Boundary Line Fight Has Fatal Ending for Man

President of Mining Company Slays Ranch Foreman Who Attacks Him During Quarrel.

Cheyenne, Wyo., June 18.—(Special.)—An argument over a dividing fence between the Ferguson ranch and one owned by Horace E. Adams, near Hecla, 20 miles west of Cheyenne, had a fatal ending early this morning.

As a result Frank Brown, foreman at the Ferguson ranch, is dead and Horace E. Adams, president of the Eagle Mining company, is confined in the county jail in this city, held on a charge of murder.

Adams, who is more than 60 years old and in poor health, telephoned the sheriff immediately following the quarrel and shooting, and then remained at his home until the arrival of the officers.

After his removal to the county jail Adams declared that Brown came to his home early this morning and started an argument over the fence.

Adams says that Brown attempted to force him to go to the Ferguson ranch house and when he refused Brown attempted to take him by force. Breaking away from his younger assailant, Adams ran into a bedroom, where he secured a revolver from beneath a mattress on a bed, and then went back out and ordered Brown to leave.

Brown refused to obey the order and attempted to continue the fight. Adams, according to his story, then fired a single shot at Brown, the bullet piercing his heart and causing instantaneous death.

An inquest will be held Monday.

Twin Falls, Idaho, June 18.—Mrs. Lyda Southard, alleged slayer of four men, who was yesterday held to trial in district court here on a charge of first degree murder of Edward F. Meyer, her fourth husband, was today denied liberty on bond by Probate Judge O. P. Duvall, the committing magistrate.

Judge Duvall held that his jurisdiction in the case had passed to the district court with the filing this morning of the transcript of evidence in the preliminary examination. Application for release of Mrs. Southard on bond will be made in the district court, her attorneys announced, with the request that immediate trial be granted if the bond is denied.

Failing health of Mrs. Southard was made a supporting principle in the application for bond. W. J. Trueblood, father of the accused woman, said today in the event Mrs. Southard was granted liberty on bond she would be taken to the family home on a ranch near here to await trial.

a woman who happens also to be a lady."

It was worth weeks of effort to her her say it. Her voice is low, distinct, musical, with a faint accent left from her French-speaking childhood. She puts into the word "lady" the consciousness of background—all that structure of culture, taste, lineage, tradition, which we call aristocracy. She was sitting very straight in a divan by the fireplace, her head held high. Somehow the idea comes of a solution for her problem; let the world see her sitting there and let the world hear her say "lady." If the world could then have any doubt of her high-minded sincerity, it must be indeed a hard old world.

But, suddenly, a smile breaks the ice of her magnificent haughtiness.

Reporter Wept to Secretary.

"It's a funny thing, life is," she declared. "A man came into this drawing room once and wept to my secretary, swearing that his whole future depended upon his seeing me. He was from a press association. And a woman came up the service elevator yesterday and walked right through the servants, announcing that she had come to see me and wouldn't go away until she had."

"They used to bark at me from the street curbs. It's a little appalling, the thought that so many people in the world are actually making their living trying to see me. They snap-shot me everywhere. They waylay me everywhere."

She grew a little somber. "When I go out now," she said, "I have no more feeling than—well, no more feeling than that fender by the fireplace. I think my own thoughts and try to be fearless—try to be worthy of my ancestors."

Courage and Confidence.

She does not need to try, I thought. Fearlessness and dignity are her heritage. In her steady gaze and her quiet voice there are the courage and the confidence of a truly great woman.

Certainly a great deal of the character which radiates from her is made up of the individuality and determination which she inherited from her mother.

The romantic career of that mother, Mrs. Brown Potter of New York, Paris and London, who left the pinnacle of social position in this country to express her artistic ambitions on the stage, will be told in the next installment.

'Kissing Blonde' Is Poor Witness For Prosecution

State Witnesses Prove Friendly With Mrs. Orthwein, Charged With Ziegler Murder.

Chicago, June 18.—Trial of Mrs. Cora Isabelle Orthwein for the murder of Herbert P. Ziegler took on added interest Friday when Mrs. Orthwein and her beautiful "kissing blonde" was put on the witness stand.

This is the woman Ziegler was dancing with on the night he was killed. He had promised to meet Mrs. Orthwein at one summer garden, but instead he went to another where he met the "kissing blonde," drank and danced with her and indulged in some wholesale osculatory performances. Word of this came to Mrs. Orthwein at the other cafe and led to the quarrel with Ziegler during which they threw liquor into each other's faces. After this scene, Mrs. Orthwein went home and Ziegler followed her. It is said he broke down the door to her room and the shooting followed.

The "kissing blonde" did not prove a very good witness for the state. She is apparently friendly with Mrs. Orthwein and has much sympathy for her. To most of the questions she replied that she "did not remember." She admitted knowing Ziegler about six weeks and told of many evenings spent at the booze parlors, drinking and dancing.

Deor Parsons, a broker and a close friend of Ziegler, was the next witness. His memory also seemed very lax at times and when a dangerous bridge had been crossed in the questioning, Mrs. Orthwein would raise her black veil and smile at him. Parsons was with Mrs. Orthwein in the early part of the evening of the tragedy. He told of many supper parties in which booze played a prominent part on the bill of fare. He also related, reluctantly, many parties at the wild, all-night cafes, but the state was unable to get much information from him to strengthen its case against Mrs. Orthwein.

The prosecution hopes to prove that jealousy of the "kissing blonde" was the motive for the killing of Ziegler—that Mrs. Orthwein felt she was losing her hold upon him and determined to kill him rather than let him go back to his family or take up with some other woman.

Banana Splits and Parfaits Knock 'Gay' Out of 'Gay White Way'

New York, June 18.—The old order changeth. The white bright lights of Broadway no longer signify "gay white way." Drab days are upon it and the old habits are blue.

You can travel the length of Broadway—from the battery to Yonkers—day or night—and the only way you can wet your whistle is with an ice cream soda or an orangeade.

And who the—who wants to start carousing when there is no way to get jazzed and pepped up, except on parfaits and banana splits?

The great drought has tamed the old path of glory—Broadway will never be the same again.

The ceremony will be performed by Bishop Herman Page of Spokane, Wash., assisted by Rev. John H. Edwards, of Lake Forest. Duncan Forbes of Rockford, Ill., will be best man, and the bride will be attended by Mrs. Robert Hunter of Pasadena, Cal., sister of the bridegroom, as matron of honor.

The couple will spend their honeymoon at an unannounced place and later they plan to spend some time at Santa Barbara, followed by a motor trip through the Canadian northwest. Ford Pays $600,000 Damage Judgment

New York, June 18.—The Hotel Woodward company, which won a judgment of $600,376, with interest from November 20, 1919, against Henry Ford, has been paid in full. The suit, and Ford's subsequent refusal to pay, started the rumor that the Detroit automobile manufacturer was in financial straits.

The suit was based on an alleged contest by which the Ford company agreed to build an addition to the Hotel Woodward. The addition never was built and the hotel sued for $600,000 damages, winning the suit and also on Ford's appeal.
