

Hugh E. Wallace Elected President Of Concord Club

New Officers to Be Installed At Lakoma Country Club Next Wednesday Night.

Hugh Wallace, for three years one of the leading and most active members of the Concord club, was elected president of that organization at the annual election of officers held Thursday noon at the Rome hotel. Other officers elected were: Will Mickel, vice president; Albert E. Rasp, second vice president, and R. A. Newell, treasurer. I. Shuler, realtor, is the retiring president.

The new officers will be installed next Wednesday night when the club members will meet at a dinner to be given at the Lakoma Country club. The club members will enjoy their annual field day and picnic at the Lakoma club Wednesday. The members and their families will meet at the Rome hotel at 1:30 and will be taken to the club grounds. There have been arranged a number of golf matches and other outdoor events. There will be prizes for all winners and each woman will be given a prize.

Following the dinner in the club house there will be dancing. During the dinner there will be a special program of "stunts" and music.

Autoist Injured When His Car Is Hit by Two Others

Joe Kowalski, 3004 Spring street, in St. Joseph hospital with probable internal injuries received when his automobile was struck by two other cars late Wednesday afternoon at Twenty-sixth and Leavenworth streets.

Joe was going east when a Universal Motor company machine came out of an alley and hit his car, according to police, and another machine driven by D. L. Underwood, 4209 Pacific street, bumped into him from behind. No arrests were made.

6 Detectives Catch 14 Men in Raid on Hotel de Box Car

Six detectives raided one of Omaha's most popular hotels early yesterday.

Chief Dempsey received a "tip" against the Hotel de Box-Car, in the heart of the Burlington railroad yards, Second and Douglas streets, and sent the sleuths to raid it.

Twenty men were caught in the net and held in the "show-up" room at headquarters.

Fourteen were held on various charges. Six were released.

Chief of Police Attending Norfolk Finger Print Meet

Chief of Police Mike Dempsey was in Norfolk yesterday attending the first state conference of Bertillon officials since the organization of the state bureau of identification by finger print and Bertillon measurement with Hans Nielsen, former Omaha sleuth, in charge. Chief Dempsey plans to return to Omaha tonight.

Disciplined Wellesley Girls' Parents Protest

Parents' indignation meetings to protest against their daughters being disciplined at Wellesley college because of the notorious party given there two weeks ago, are being held in the east, according to the New York Times.

That newspaper mentions the name of Catherine Goss of Omaha as one of the girls who contributed to the harmless gaiety of the party.

Robert H. McAdoe, son of William McAdoe, former secretary of the treasury and son-in-law of ex-President Wilson, was one of the young men present.

Seniors in the party received their diplomas by mail. They were not permitted to take part in commencement exercises.

Miss Goss is the daughter of Charles A. Goss, district judge.

Morals Squad Sets Record for One Month's Stretches

From May 19 to June 21 was the best month any police morals squad in Omaha ever had, according to figures compiled yesterday by Detectives George Summit and Harvey Haney, in charge.

Raids during that period netted the city $4,650, the figures show, including 14 stills, 7,000 gallons of mash. The stills brought $1,400 in fines, 20 illegal possession cases secured $2,000 in fines, $220 bonds were forfeited, and disorderly houses raided netted $1,030 in fines.

2 Horses Are Stolen From Pasture North of Florence

Whoa! There's an old-fashioned horse thief hereabouts somewhere, according to Edward Porter, 415 North Fifteenth street, who reported to police his team of horses was stolen from a pasture six miles north of Florence.

Well-to-Do Give To Milk Fund to Save Poor Tots

Babies of Needy Families Grow Thin and Puny in Hot Summer Months for Lack of Nourishment.

Some babies in Omaha have everything that money can buy—loving care, beautiful homes and every comfort to ease them on their way through life.

In another section of the city are babies less fortunate. Many of them do not even have enough cool, nourishing milk to sustain them through the hot summer months.

They wait and wait, grow thin and puny—and sometimes, pass out.

For Babies of Poor. It is for them—the babies of the poor, that The Bee makes an annual appeal for funds. Milk and ice are furnished free each day to these needy families, through the agency of the Visiting Nurse association.

Well-to-do parents, grateful for their own happy, healthy youngsters, frequently swell the total of The Bee's fund in behalf of babies not so well placed. Today one such contribution comes in the name of the little miss herself.

Contributions. The Bee fund stands today as follows: Previously acknowledged $122.82; Baby Virginia Loomis, 5.00; Jefferson Ladies' Aid society of Fremont, Neb., 5.00; H. D. Neely, 5.00; H. J. Brooke, 1.00; Total $148.82

Brief City News

Kiwanians to Picnic—The Kiwanis club will close its season with a picnic at the Council Bluffs country club next Thursday.

New Thought Conference—The Iowa-Nebraska district of the International New Thought Alliance will hold an all-day conference at 302 Patterson block in Omaha Sunday.

First Station "Visitor"—The first man taken under arrest to the new central police station yesterday was Harry Haykin, 2701 Howard street. He was charged with driving a truck under pleasure car license.

Clerks to Be Dropped—Twenty-five per cent of the clerks employed by the government in the Army building at Fifteenth and Dodge streets will be cut from the pay roll at the end of this month, due to the curtailment of appropriations of the War department.

The Bee's Short Story

Davia Or Gloria. By LILY WANDEL.

Perhaps he would have been positive that he loved Davia if his mother had not interferred. She never missed an occasion to draw his attention to the girl's good points—and he had to admit that there were many. She arranged too many opportunities for him to be with her. He did not want the stage all set for his romance. He could manage his own love affairs. His mother argued his opposition and to show her and everybody that he could do just as he pleased he began to pay particular attention to Gloria Waring.

Common sense told him that Gloria would not make a suitable wife. He did not like to picture the future mother of his children smoking cigars, drinking cocktails, laughing at stories a bit shady—and Gloria did all these things.

There was Davia, dainty, refined and tactful, swinging the conversation away from subjects too coarse or delicate to discuss, smiling in gentle disapproval at short-skirted, red-lipped Gloria. He liked to see Davia in his mother's drawing room, her yellow hair shimmering, her slender white fingers on the piano keys, singing some old ballad in a low sweet voice. He loved to hear her talk. She avoided contractions and slang. The unforced euphony was like pleasant music to him. In everything she did or said she showed her good breeding. Davia would never embarrass him.

Then why did he hesitate, he asked himself for the 100th time. Had this dark-eyed Gloria thrown a spell over him? Was he weak enough to fall for cheap attractions? He had absolutely nothing in common with her. She was not familiar with any of his favorite poets, had never heard of Keats, but she rather adored K. C. B.

Her slang made him wince and frequently her ideas shocked him. She might be nice as a stimulant, but for everyday diet Davia was what he needed.

He wished something would happen to absolutely disgust him with Gloria, to make him forget her, so that he could turn in peace to gentle Davia and be happy. He felt he would be happy with Davia, for she was the kind of a girl he wanted for his wife, the girl he had imagined in his dreams.

A solitary round of golf ended, he dropped wearily into a rocker on the country club porch, his mind fluctuating between Davia and Gloria, when the sound of his name came floating through an open window at his elbow.

"Poor Jule Riley, I guess he will fall for her before long!" The matron's voice sweetly pessimistic.

"Well," a second woman's voice, sharp and bridling, "what's wrong with her, anyhow?"

"Oh, my dear, haven't you noticed how she's hunning after him? But that isn't the point. I live next door to her; I know. She's as glittering and hollow as a brass jardiniere. A girl who pretends her mother is an invalid simply because she is ashamed of her—"

Jule heard enough. Two minutes later he was in his roadster, his lips in a thin, grim line. He remembered having heard that Gloria's mother was an invalid and he was going to find out the truth about the matter.

In front of a gardened house he stopped his car, raced up the steps, and to the maid who answered his ring, asked for Mrs. Waring. She seemed surprised. It was quite evident that very few persons asked for Gloria's mother.

"Never mind announcing me," he remarked grimly; "if she's in the back garden I'll find her myself," and stalked off. In a way he was glad of this, it brought things to a climax, left him free for Davia. He just wanted to be absolutely sure, then he would go.

Over the velvet lawn he tramped straight to a clump of bushes where he heard voices. Tempted by the seclusion of the thick green, he decided before going around and bringing himself to view, to peep through the spreading branches and see Gloria and her mother unobserved.

An aristocratic lady, prematurely gray, in a wheel chair, her face showing lines of suffering and peevishness, a tea wagon loaded with dainties, Gloria flamboyant in charity colored organdy, a high Spanish comb in her hair.

Jule suppressed a sigh. Davia in blue and white would have fitted in much better. Gloria was rattling the teacups cheerily. Davia would have been noisier.

Gloria began to whistle a popular melody. Jule winced and closed his eyes. When he opened them the back gate banged and a short, fat, little woman, spectacled, out of breath, but beaming, came waddling as fast as she could toward the two ladies.

"Here I am!" she chuckled. "Don't say a word! I'm supposed to be in bed with one of my bad spells. Ain't it a scream, hey?"

"Wouldn't she let you come?" inquired Mrs. Waring bristling.

"Chucks!" answered the little fat woman, sitting down and spreading her red square hands on her lap. "I ain't complainin', mind you. I know how the poor girl feels and I'm more'n ready to keep out of the way when her fine friends are around."

"Never mind announcing me," he remarked grimly; "if she's in the back garden I'll find her myself," and stalked off. In a way he was glad of this, it brought things to a climax, left him free for Davia. He just wanted to be absolutely sure, then he would go.

Society Folk Caught In Raid on Roadhouse

Out at the roadside inn known as "Summertime," a gay party was gathered in an anti-Volstead indignation meeting. Glasses clinked, laughter bubbled and the Volsteadian principles of perpetual drouth rolled and tossed in a gale of merry quips and surge of cocktails.

The merriment was at its height when the door of the private dining room was opened, disclosing "the law," blue-uniformed and uttering the cryptic sentence:

"This party is pinched."

But the magistrate before whom they were haled, protesting and indignant, was more broad-minded than the lone officer who staged the raid. The revelers were released and bidden goodspeed and happy days.

Spencer Bourke, well known in fashionable circles, condemned the outrage of the arrest in warm terms.

How the publicity attending this raid and arrest affected the lives of Bourke and his fiancée, Alayne Guernsey, heiress to $5,000,000, is told in "The Bogie of Fear," exciting serial by Arthur Somers Roche, starting in The Sunday Bee July 3.

Youth Eyes Park Spooners With Field Glasses; Arrested

Spooners at Hanscom park have been watched.

Special Officer Anthony found it out. He says he caught Allen R. Bowers, clerk, 927 South Thirty-first street, eyeing the spooners through a pair of field glasses from a point of vantage. So Anthony caused the youth's arrest on a charge of disorderly conduct.
