What's What

Some trained nurses are a joy forever; when one of these deparis every member of the family is sorry to miss the capable, gentle, courteous woman who has co-operated so faithfully with the family doctor in the restoration of health and joy and peace to the household.

That is the perfect type, but there are many other types not quite so satisfying. One of the most annoying is the nurse who abuses her privileges; who calls up friends on the telephone and holds long conversations with them, or who invites people to visit her while she is on duty. A wise physician always encourages the nurse to go out and take fresh air exercise in the intermissions of sick room service, but when, instead, she attempts to bring her outside affairs into the household she is not co-operating with the doctor, nor adding to the peace-of-mind of her patient, nor is she demonstrating the quality of good breeding, which is neither intrusive nor obtrusive.

Problems That Plexus

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX

A Question of Money.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 18 and love a man of 28, with whom I have been going out. Now, Miss Fairfax, am I right not to give up my girl friends till I am engaged to him at least? Then again, he tells me he needs to save money. Now, Miss Fairfax, our trouble started when I told him to pretend to have money in his pocket to go to any place, but he was wise enough to go only where his means allow (the only place we ever go is to the movies). Still, he is very good. I'm sure that he loves me very much, but we always have little misunderstandings.

VIRGINIA.

Perhaps he doesn't care to be reminded that he has so little money. If I were you I would drop the subject and try to look on the cheerful side of things. If you really love each other, it will be a pleasure for you both to save.

A Deceiving Lover.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I am 18 and in love with a man 21. He has always told me he loved me and intended to marry me, but the other night he told me he never really loved me. It seems he was in love with another girl but he met me, and she jilted him and married another. What would you do? A. G.

You ask what to do? It seems to me that I would regard the young man's frank statement as a polite way of telling me that he was tired of me. Certainly I wouldn't be deceived a second time.

FASHION'S BLUE BOOK

By CORINNE LOWE.

New York.—(Special Correspondence.)—The athletic career of many a lady is confined to her prowess in finding a new kind of costume for a sport in which she never takes part. The above model, however, is not one of those for the Country club veranda game. It is a real honest-to-god, honest-to-god, one-piece frock of pink linen worn over a white shirt waist. These frocks have recently made their appearance in Fifth avenue shop windows, and they are carried out most often in linen or wool jerseys. As it will be seen at once a model like this is intensely practical and adapted to any kind of outdoor to which you may be addicted.

Cluttering.

A house which is well planned, perfectly convenient and comfortable will be beautiful. Don't clutter your home with things which, though they may be useful or attractive in themselves, are things which no one uses or enjoys. Every one is not able to afford expensive things, but if harmonious colors for the walls, floors and upholstery are chosen, together with furniture selected for comfort rather than ornamentation, the home will be restful and attractive.

MILES ASSERTS HE FEELS LIKE NEW MAN NOW

Omaha Man Overcomes Stomach Trouble That Worried Him for 15 Years.

"I never dreamed a little medicine could do so much good as Tanlac did me," said Olen F. Miles, 620 North Eighteenth street, Omaha, Neb.

"For fifteen years or more my stomach bothered me, and no matter how careful I was about what I ate I was sure to have spells of indigestion. My back hurt me terribly at times and I had awful headaches and spells of dizziness. I was subject to frequent bilious attacks, too. "Tanlac did me more good than all the medicine I took in the fifteen years put together. Why, I am not like the same man, and my digestion is so good I couldn't tell I ever had stomach trouble at all. I would like to tell the world that Tanlac is the best medicine ever made."

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

How Mother Graham Surprised Even Dicky.

If there were a cobwebby, dirty corner of the old Dacey farmhouse which my doughty mother-in-law did not inspect minutely and make me share in the scrutiny I do not remember it. No detail, good or bad, of the structure escaped her, and she might have been a prospective purchaser instead of a merely willing away the time until the repair of the car should be accomplished, or rather the pretense of repair with which we were keeping her on the place we wished to buy.

Dick strode in as she was peering into a door beside one of the old fireplaces.

"Look out, mother, you may find a Bluebeard victim or a case of hantch," he called gaily.

She paid no attention to him until she had scrutinized the interior of the dusky cavity thoroughly. Then she straightened herself and spoke excitedly.

"It's an old warming oven. Just think of it."

Dicky flashed an amused glance at me. We are used to Mother Graham's reverence for ancient things, but the above model, however, is not one of those for the Country club veranda game. A Haughty Exit.

"Oh, it's all right!" he rejoined. "Fortunately, Madge was driving on the extreme right side of the road when it gave up the ghost, so it isn't in anybody's way, and I've sent a message for the garage man with instructions to look like the devil when he gets here. Thus I'll have a chance to explore this, too. I have a pretty taste in antiques myself. I was always afraid I'd marry one—probably would if Madge hadn't seen me first and grabbed me."

I caught her up eagerly. "Wouldn't it make a wonderful living room," I exclaimed. She gave me a stare that made me uncomfortable by something elusive in it which I could not understand. "I thought you said there was nothing for sale or rent in the place," she said incisively. "What was the matter with this? Too much trouble to fix it up?"

"I could hardly believe my ears. Had she really capitulated so quickly?"

"Why! I—I—" my voice was nothing but an embarrassed stammer. Dicky came to my rescue dashing.

"Madge never thought you would consider it for a moment, mother, dear," he said, "besides I don't believe anybody knew it was for sale before Mrs. Ticer spoke of it. Do you really mean you think we'd better try to rent it?"

"Rent it? No!" his mother snapped.

"You pernicious influence!" he murmured to me with mock reproach, tweaking my ear in passing to follow his mother into the next room. And, of course, with the assurance that my husband was on my side instead of his mother's in the age-old contest, I promptly forgot all rancor toward her, indeed, I obliterated the little sting from my memory.

We found her standing in the doorway between the big old-fashioned, double parlors—the second visit she had paid the spot—gazing speculatively at the carved woodwork.

"If this were thrown into one big room," she said, as if to herself.

"You'd have to spend the money to fix it up, anyway, and it's a valuable investment. Everybody who can ought to have a small farm in the background."

"And you approve of our buying it?" Dicky asked incredulously. "Yes, decidedly, but not of the method you two have taken to make me approve," his mother returned, with sternness in her face, but the
