EUROPE'S MORNING AFTER, by Kenneth L. Roberts. Published by Harper Bros.

At the end of 1919 the author made a trip through Europe to see at first-hand the conditions of the belligerent countries after over four years of war.

The nations were just beginning to realize that the war was literally at an end.

Optimism was dead! The future of each country was a matter of guess work even for the brain of the highest financier.

Into such a chaotic state the author went to find the best, and the worst, reports. He brings back all there is little else to learn of Europe at the beginning of 1920 than is found in the pages of the present book. The ever-present humor of the author fills the pages, and the fights and rows which the peace conference started are given lengthy hearings.

LINDA CONDON, by Joseph Hergersheimer, published by the Doran company. There is in Joseph Hergersheimer's Linda Condon a strange combination of reality and unreality.

Linda is clearly the creation of a dream-mind and she could hold no place in a practical three meals a day world.

We meet her first as a young girl, living in hotels, with a mother, whose one thought is pleasure at, no matter what the cost.

Through this mother Linda learns life, and life lived accordingly, repels. She creates a dream-world and throws herself bodily into it.

As a consequence she reaches middle age having grasped nothing, and meaning nothing, even to a husband and two children.

Having never been real she has nothing real to give.

To the reader she appears as a beautiful painting the achievement of a great artist, and one wonders why the artist neglected to create the spiritual in his dream-land.

The mother is real flesh and blood; thoroughly materialistic. Her goal, a perfect marcelle-wave, taxicabs, and nightly roof garden entertainments.

The theme of the book hangs about Pleydon, a sculptor—"Success through renunciation."

Here the reader cannot help but feel the keenest disappointment. A beautiful and strong theme handled more through inference than reality. We feel we must be told what the author is doing with his Pleydon and wish strongly for the job in the hands of a realist.

THE SANDMAN; HIS PUPPY STORIES, by Henry W. Fress. Published by the Fess company.

The book is all about dogs. It is told in a clear and readable style that children like.

Uncle John, who lives in the little white house with green shutters, at the top of the hill, tells the story of each little doggie, and the doggies all live on the other side of Kitty-way lane in Animal Land.

Children will love the book, for the doggies do just the things children like to do.

Children will have a new insight into their dog friends after reading these tales. Dogs will be playmates with them and fast friends as well.

Each story has several illustrations, in which the dogs are dressed in present-day styles for juveniles.

OUR LITTLE CRUSADER COUSIN OF LONG AGO, Published by Page company.

This is a new volume of a well known series of juvenile fiction entitled "The Little Cousins of Long Ago Series."

The volume tells the tale of the Crusaders and what they endured against the Saracens in defense of a high ideal.

History abounds through the pages and it is written with the enthusiasm and knowledge of a genuine Crusader. The places described have all strong historic associations. The book is entertaining and instructive.

Wed Two Weeks, Bride Ends Life

Note Clutched in Hand Shows Suicide Due to First Marital Quarrel.

Atlantic, Ia., June 30.—(Special.)—Mrs. Ira Harris, beautiful young wife of a farmer living four miles from here, killed herself today by taking poison, just two weeks after the day of her marriage.

The husband found his bride lying across her bed with a poison vial clasped in one hand and a note addressed to her mother in the other. The note intimated her first marital quarrel had led her to take her life.

Harris was in town when the suicide occurred. When he discovered his wife she was disrobed. She had gone to her room without being noticed by other members of the family. The husband was grief-stricken because of the tragedy.

Mrs. Harris was 20 years old. She was a social favorite in the community in which she lived and was always of a happy disposition.

"We had always been happy," sobbed her young husband. "Oh, why—why did she do this? Life was so bright and promising for us both. And now she is gone."
