Seven Brothers at Centennial of Amherst

At the centennial celebration of Amherst college, June 22, seven brothers, all graduates of the college, were present and held a family reunion. They are: Rev. George P. Eastman, Orange, N. J., '84; Osgood T. Eastman, Omaha, Neb., '86; Lucius R. Eastman, New York City, '93; Dr. Alex. C. Eastman, Springfield, '96; Rufus P. Eastman, '99; H. Keyes Eastman, New York City, '01, and John Eastman, Boston, '02.

They are sons of the late Lucius R. Eastman, D. D. (class of '57), who was pastor for 39 years of the Plymouth Congregational church at Framingham.

The family has a remarkable and unique record in connection with Amherst college. Joseph Eastman was the first treasurer of the town of Amherst; his son, John, was a prosperous farmer for his day and gave $1,500 out of the property valued at $12,000 to help found Amherst college. John's youngest son, David, was a graduate of the college in the class of 1835, but prior to this a grandson of Joseph Eastman, named Lucius R. Eastman, had already been graduated in 1833. Then Lucius R. Eastman's son, Lucius R. Eastman, was graduated in 1857, and he was father of the seven sons who will gather at this centennial. In addition to the above Rev. George P. Eastman of the class of 1884 has graduated two sons, Gardner P. of the class of 1915, and Philip Yale of the class of 1920.

This makes six generations of Eastmans who have been directly connected with the college, one as a contributor to its founding and five generations as graduates; four of the five in direct line, and all this within a period of 100 years.

The seven brothers have among them some eight sons, who are all headed for Amherst college in the near future.—Boston Transcript.

Wash Cloth for the Guest Room.

An effective but inexpensive addition to the linen in the guest room may be made by embroidering a simple cross-stitch design—a rose, for instance—in the corner of a wash cloth composed of a square of Turkish toweling. With the aid of a machine, stitch around the cloth on the inside of the border and fringe the edge. The stitching keeps the toweling from raveling, while the fringe makes a dainty finish. Several of these wash cloths in different colors tied with a contrasting ribbon make a useful and pretty little gift.

The latest felt hats show facings of black satin in contrast to the lighter shade of the hat. Used with a black ornament, the effect is striking.

Beauty in a Vase.

There is almost always in every office some young women with a fondness for flowers on whose desk at this time of year you will find some gay blossoms of their brought by an associate who dwells in the country. You like to see the flowers, and you like her for cherishing the flowers that have been brought her, but why, oh why, does she put them in an empty milk bottle? You know—she probably knows too—that a vase of good lines can be bought for 10 or 15 cents.

Of course there is nothing innately ugly about a clean milk bottle. The lines of it may be as good as from a purely aesthetic sense as the lines of the vase you buy, but there is always the undercurrent of feeling that it is a milk bottle, its associations are all homely and humdrum. It is like a fruit jar—convenient and usually available but a poor selection as a flower holder nevertheless. An Italian wine bottle may be as humdrum and prosaic to the Italian but its associations are different for us. Therefore it is picturesque and somehow pleasant. Likewise are ginger-jars which enjoyed the same sort of vogue some years ago. Mayhap in years to come when milkmen have invented some entirely different mode of delivering milk, these old time glass containers may be cherished as interesting antiques, but that is many years hence.

There are many cheap, expensive vases as well as cheap vases, that are almost as offensive as the milk bottle, not through homely associations but because they are actually ugly. Their colors are not harmonious, their lines are bad, they are over ornate or too complicated in design. Clear glass vases are usually to be preferred to the decorated ones because they show the leaves and stems in the water. The woman who wants attractive flower containers at small cost would do well to buy a few simple baskets and then fit these with plain tumblers or glass jars in which to place the flowers. The effect of basket and flowers is usually pleasing, especially on the veranda or in the simple surroundings of most summer homes.

What's What

By HELEN DECIE

What is the most inconsiderate form of rudeness? Surely, nothing could be more discourteous than the bitter proof of "man's inhumanity to man," as exemplified in an inquisitive stare at, or after, any person physically afflicted. This action, so torturing to the sensitive victim, is too often perpetrated by men and women who "should know better." Lord Byron, who had been lame from infancy, declared that the poor, who, almost invariably, had the delicacy to ignore his deformity, were more "dependably civilized" than many of the wealthy tourists, whose upbringing did not prevent them from staring at his club-foot.

Staring is bad form in any case, but scrutinizing the defect of a cripple, or of a person afflicted with strabismus (cross-eyes) or hare-lip, or any other disfigurement, is not "the refinement of cruelty," but it is most offensive vulgarity. (Copyright, 1921, by Public Ledger Co.)

Club Luncheon.

L. O. E. club will hold its next luncheon on July 12 at Happy Hollow club.

Standard Measures.

Cake making is not "pure luck" and any one who can turn out a good cake without measuring the ingredients is simply lucky. However, even an inexperienced cook can make a good cake if she uses the proper standards of measurement and follows tried recipes. A half-pint measuring cup, glass or metal, for measuring the flour and sugar, and a standard set of measuring spoons for measuring the butter and baking powder will be found indispensable in proper cake making.
