Have You Time For Play?

By LORETO C. LYNCH.

"She is out walking every afternoon—I can see her from my window while I am still ironing or washing dishes, or doing the thousand things my house requires—simply don't know how she does it. She must neglect her home terribly."

Thus wailed a tired little housewife to me the other day as together we watched a charming young woman wheeling the baby and enjoying the spring air. Was her home neglected? Not a bit. For she was a born manager.

She had a home only large enough to serve her needs, furnished with a view toward making it easy to keep clean. Instead of investing in a work-by-the-day houseworker, she put her money into labor-saving devices.

She decided to do her housework in the morning. But, first, she allotted one full hour to the care of baby. He had a corner shut off by a screen sacred to his things. And they never got very far away. The baby slept after his bath, which was given between 9 and 10. From 10 to 1 the mother managed to fit in all her work.

She washed dishes but once a day. The dishes from the evening meal and the noon meal were scraped and put into a zinc lined box. These dishes she washed at about 10. An electric vacuum swept as no broom ever can and took but 15 minutes to go right through her little home. Each morning she planned to do one bit of housecleaning well. For instance, Monday was kitchen morning; Tuesday, bathroom day; Wednesday, she concentrated on the bedroom. And there was dining room and living room days. She did not try to do all the rooms any one day.

About 1 o'clock she had her luncheon, usually some leftover from the evening meal plus a cup of cocoa and some bread and butter.

After luncheon, for baby as well as mother, the mother carefully dressed and was ready for a walk to market. The afternoon was leisure time. Housekeeping had its allotted time, baby had his. And she was not trying to wash the dishes with one hand and rock the baby with the other.

Have you any leisure? If not, why not? Perhaps I can help you plan it.
