Overseas Women Seeking to Federalize

Women who served overseas during the war will petition their senators and congressmen to support action to federalize the Women's Overseas Service League, their national organization.

Each member attending the dinner of the local unit Monday night at the Council Bluffs Country club, was instructed to write a personal letter immediately as an act of incorporation is now before the judiciary in Washington and announcement is expected daily of the date set for the bill's presentation to congress.

The American Legion, Daughters of the American Revolution and the Near East Relief are federalized organizations.

Patriotic societies and the American Legion will be asked to promote the measure as well.

Miss Mary MacIntosh was named chairman of a committee to recommend what work the overseas girls will undertake in connection with the reconstruction hospital and vocational school to be opened next month at Bellevue. Miss Edith Standeven and Miss Lucille Scott also serve on this committee.

More than 60 visits to ex-service men in local hospitals was reported by Miss Marie Matthews, chairman of the hospital committee. Miss Helen Cornell, president, reported that the club, true to its service ideals, did not accept its share of proceeds from the American Legion carnival booth.

"We decided that the Legion's need for funds at this time is more urgent than our own needs," she announced.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

The Reason Madge Rebelled at Dr. Pettit's Suggestion.

Under Dr. Pettit's escort I went downstairs to the hospital office and listened with a little feeling of amusement to the colloquy between him and the hospital matron as to my proposed long distance telephone call to Robert Savarin.

"Of course, doctor, if you wish it, I shall be delighted to have her use the office telephone," she cooed. "Where did you say the place was?" She turned to me.

Cold Spring, N. Y., in the Catskill mountains.

"Oh!" she said, a little blankly, "conversations had been thus summarily interrupted."

"Very reprehensible of them, I am cago, and from there will go to Petoskey, Mich. Mr. and Mrs. Brogan will remain for the summer, but Miss Doane will return in three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. John Beveridge of Grant, Neb., formerly of this city, have been spending a few days in Omaha visiting relatives. They are returning from a motor trip to Missouri and will visit Mrs. Beveridge's mother, Mrs. Mary Clark, in Plattsmouth, enroute home.

Mr. and Mrs. E. R. De Young and children, Ruth and Booth, who arrived recently from Denver to make their home here and have been with Mrs. De Young's parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. Booth, left Saturday to visit Mr. De Young's parents at Kesburg, Ill.

Mrs. Edward Black, who, accompanied by her husband, went to the Pacific coast several weeks ago, is a guest at the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Magoon of Oakland, Cal. She will return to Omaha about August 1. Mr. Black returned several days ago.

Mr. and Mrs. George Campbell and little daughter, Ethel Pauline, left Friday evening for their home in Erie, Pa. They have been here since the death of the late Mrs. Fred Hamilton, sister of Mrs. Campbell. Miss Anne Robinson and her mother, Mrs. E. L. Robinson, are at the Fred Hamilton home. Their plans for the summer are indefinite.

then turned back to the physician, a doubtful look on her face.

"You know what the service is here, doctor," she said, "and how many calls we have. I am afraid there will be interruptions. The operators have a most annoying habit of disconnecting our conversations and pushing through emergency calls."

"Her tone said that this proceeding was the unpardonable thing, and I guessed that her own private secretary," said Dr. Pettit, but the woman appeared absolutely uncomprehending of the irony in his voice.

"Yes isn't it?" she asked naively. "I've thought often of reporting them. But in this place you're so dependent upon the good-will of the telephone operators I would rather put up with anything than annoy them."

"I think, on the whole then, it will be better for Mrs. Graham to come on down to my office," the physician replied. "I have two telephones."

"Doctor," the matron protested flusteringly, "you don't imagine that I object at all to the lady's telephoning."

A Peculiar Emotion.

"I never imagine things," he replied a little frigidly. "I simply think Mrs. Graham will accomplish her purpose more quickly if she uses my telephone."

I turned to the matron with my very best smile.

"Would it trouble you too much to relay a message to Mrs. Underwood if I telephone you later when I get my message through?"

"Oh, no, indeed! I shall be glad to do so," she returned.

"Thank you," I followed Dr. Pettit out of the building with an odd, and as far as I knew unjustifiable little feeling, that if it were a possible thing for the woman to get the message twisted or forget it altogether she would do so.

"I shall be extremely thankful when Mrs. Harned returns," Dr. Pettit said in low emphatic tones as we went down the steps. "This woman will drive me to some desperate action if she remains on duty much longer."

"She is not the regular superintendent, then," I said idly. I was in no mood for conversation, but determined to feign an interest in what he was saying.

"That woman?" The physician's tone expressed the nth power of contempt. "Indeed, no! Mrs. Harned is a most capable person, but she is on her vacation, and this was the only relief available."

I was glad of the information, for I detest inefficiency, and I had snarvelled at this one weak spot in an institution which appeared to be so up-to-date and well regulated as the hospital. I had wondered how so inefficient a person could have built up so capable a service. But evidently the absent superintendent had constructed so smoothly running a machine that it was functioning almost perfectly without her for a few weeks.

Dr. Pettit helped me into the car, but when we had traversed the hospital block and the main boulevard until we had reached the crossroads, one of which led to the Ticer farm, I was surprised to see him turn the car in the opposite direction—that leading to Bridgehampton.

"We will drive through Bridgehampton, then down the Sag road to Sag Harbor," he said, with the touch of pomposity which always both annoys and amuses me. "You will save time that way, and so will I. There is no need of my stopping at the farm, and if we should pass that way without stopping, an angry husband might be annoyed."

That he spoke only the truth, I knew, yet I found myself furious at his pompous tactlessness. I felt the need of hotly defending Dicky from the insinuation which I knew in my heart was only too true.

"We shall save time, no doubt," I said frigidly, "but you are mistaken."

in thinking my husband would be annoyed. He would know, of course, that there must be some very good reason for my not stopping, with Junior in the house."

"You are privileged, of course, to have your own opinion in such matters," the physician retorted stiffly, "and—no am I," he added obstinately, while I bit my lips to keep from answering, wondering anew how so skillful and kindly a physician could be so absolutely tactless and disagreeable in his dealing with social questions.
