Alaskan, on Visit Here, Would He Were in Sitka

"Give me a nice, comfortable temperature of about 40 below zero and I ask no more," says Jacob Bohleber, who is here on a visit from Sitka and Fairbanks, Alaska. "This heat is unbearable. I never saw anything like it, and I'm anxious to get back to good old Sitka, where a man can breathe."

Bohleber left Omaha 17 years ago for Alaska, where he has been ever since. He is visiting his sister, Mrs. Mary Harte, 4810 Chicago street, and his daughter, Mrs. T. J. Burns, Bemis park.

"I've felt 62 below zero up there and didn't mind it near as much as I have this heat of the last few weeks in Omaha. I'll have something to tell the boys when I get back."

Bohleber says most of the gold-seeking in Alaska now is done by drilling. They drill much as they do for oil. When they find dirt-bearing gold in paying quantities they sink a shaft and mine it.
