Nebraska Grain Rate Higher Than That of Colorado

Charges Not Controlled by Distance But by "Reasonableness" Freight Agent's Reply to Protests.

Western Nebraska farmers shipping their grain over the Union Pacific lines pay a much higher freight rate than do those in western Kansas and eastern Colorado, though heir distance from Missouri river markets is about the same, G. M. l'unison, an Omaha lawyer with a wheat farm near Kimball, Neb., and another near Chemung, Colo., declares. The two towns lie close together near the Nebraska-Colorado ine, and yet the grain rate from Chemung to its market at Kansas City is 91-2 cents less than the rate rom the Nebraska town of Kimball to its Missouri river market, Omaha,

In reply to protests from Mr. Tunison, W. S. Rodman, president of the American State bank at Kimball; J. A. Kuhn, traffic manager of the Omaha Grain exchange, and C. E. Childe, traffic manager of the Omaha Chamber of Commerce, it is stated by the general freight agent of the Union Pacific, Charles J. Lane, that he has never met a man competent to pass definitely on the precision of any given rate. He de-clares in a letter that rates are not controlled by distance or geographical location, but by "reasonableness." He also makes the point that rates on grain shipped from Omaha to St. Louis, Chicago or the scaboard, are the same as those of any other Missouri river point, regardless of whether or not Omaha is farther from these points. He shows that farmers at Creston, Ia., pay 5 cents a bushel more to ship their grain to Chicago than the rate from Omaha to Chicago for grain grown in Nebraska. He also cites stations in Wyoming, South Dakota, Oklahoma and Texas points to markets the same distance away as is Kimball from Omaha, and with rates 10 cents a bushel higher. and even more.

Tunison's Reply to Lane.
