What's What By HELEN DECIE

An Illinois correspondent asks What's What which should say good morning first in a business office when a young girl enters, and a woman 15 years older is already seated at a desk. It would seem that because neither deems it "her place to speak first," a coldness has arisen, so that they have solved their diffi-culty by not speaking at all! That is a poor solution. Ordinari-ly, it is the older woman's privilege

(not "place") to speak first, and the greeting should be acknowledged the younger woman. But it is also the custom for each newcomer to enter with a brisk "Good morning!" and because of this exchange of office greetings are generally al-most simultaneous. If the fellow-workers, regardless of years or "first come," would strive to vie with eah other to be first to utter that cheery "good morning!" no uncompanion-able silences could be permitted to cloud their day together.
