

Crowds Besiege Library to Solve Bee Questionnaire

Reference Works in Demand; Seekers After Knowledge Find Orange in Berry and Onion Related to Lily.

Did you know the onion and lily were related? Well they are. The lily spends most of its time in high society and church, thus characterizing itself as a plutocrat. The onion is usually found in some sort of stew and being poor, the lily has nothing to do with it.

Not Edison Product. The questionnaire did not originate with Edison. Many of the boys who heaved a mean hand grenade in the Argonne knew the name Edison.

One of the questions is: What is a spectrum? Looking up spectrum in the encyclopedia one learns that it has something to do with spectrography. After spectrum is says: See, dispersion, light, spectroscopy.

Concerns Geography. One of the questions has to do with the geography of Nebraska. Consequently a new map of the state showing everything connected with it geographically has been hung up in the library hall for easy access.

What is an orange, appears to be an easy question. The answer is probably written, a fruit. Brother you never was so wrong.

Husbands Come Too. Husbands come to the reference room and look up the questions for their wives. Hired girls look up the answers after they have done the dishes at night.

The librarians at first thought they would compile answers to all the questions and pass them out to all comers. Then the idea came to them that it would be more educational for each person seeking the answers to look them up himself.

Did you know that the horse once had five toes and was known to our forefathers as the colippus? It did, and was. It took five periods of time for the Bee to evolve into what it is today.

Contest closes August 31. All answers to the questionnaire must be in by 6 p. m.

Favors Coeducation In Business Colleges

Prof. J. A. Youngstrom, president of the American Institute of Business Efficiency, claims that a business college teaching shorthand, typewriting, secretarial work, bookkeeping, accounting, stenography, salesmanship, etc., should be co-educational.

Timidity, unnecessary embarrassment and inability successfully to meet and converse with men or women of opposite sex, socially or on business subjects, are some of the handicaps of people who have been isolated one from the other throughout their college career.

Due to these reasons, he says, among the students of the American Institute of Business Efficiency, are both men and women.

Man Freezes Hands. Plattsburgh, N.Y., Aug. 7.—(Special.)—Frank Johnson of Louisville had his hands frozen in midsummer while attempting to connect a gas drum in which the valve had become opened to his soda fountain.

Creighton University. Commencement of the ninth session of Creighton university summer school, held in the University auditorium, was remarkable in that graduates came from the eastern and western extremities of the continent, and from near and distant parts of the intervening country both north and south.

Rev. Mark J. McNeal of the Catholic University of Japan, was a guest of Creighton university, July 28, at a luncheon held at the university.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

What Marsden's Letter Meant to Dicky. That something far out of the ordinary had happened to Dicky, the news of which was contained in the letter he was smoothing out, I was sure. I was certain of something else also, that whatever revelation the letter contained, I did not wish to learn it on the public highway.

"Oh, Dicky, please! We're almost at the farm. I'll just give these sulphur candles to Mrs. Ticer—she's waiting for them, you know—and then let's go up on our hill. We shan't be disturbed there, and you can tell me all about it."

"Oh, of course, if Mrs. Ticer's sulphur candles are of more importance than my affairs!" he began ruffily, but my ear caught an intonation of relief beneath his crustiness, and I knew that he in reality approved my suggestion.

"It's No Use—" I did not answer him—indeed, did not speak again until we had turned into the neglected, grass-grown driveway of the Dacey place, had delivered the sulphur candles to Mrs. Ticer, and then turned the car up an old weedy cow-patch leading past the barn to the pasture land on the hillside.

But he only gave it his unusual tribute of a long, silent, admiring look, then turned back to me with a gesture which savored somewhat of actual despair. What could Marsden have written to make my Peter Pan look like this?

"It's no use, Madge," Dicky said heavily. "The only use I can see for this view is for me to do it over and over again, and go around with the little pictures under my arm peddling them. Look at this!"

"Do You Wonder—?" I scanned them curiously, seeing what I always saw in Marsden's letters, a short typewritten page, dictated to his stenographer, for office inspection and record, and then a letter written in his own rather eccentric cigraphy for Dicky's eyes alone, a letter of inside explanation, intimate, confidential, highly indiscreet if it fell into certain hands, but safe for Dicky—who counts Marsden as one of his best friends—always destroyed by his private letters as soon as he had read them.

I took up the official letter first. "My Dear Mr. Graham: I regret to inform you that Mr. Pennington is not satisfied with the illustrations you have made for his forthcoming book. In that day, we have vainly tried in every way to alter his decision, but he absolutely refuses to consider them, saying that they do not correctly interpret the spirit of his novel. As you will no doubt remember, our agreement provided that Mr. Pennington's approval was necessary for the acceptance of the illustrations. I wish you would come into the office that we may talk the matter over. Please advise me when you come in Monday. Mr. Pennington will be out of the city until then, and, of course, it is necessary that he be at the conference. Cordially yours, STEPHEN MARSDEN."

I put the page down, looking at my husband with a sympathetic, lightened understanding of his feeling upon the receipt of the letter. I remember so well how frankly overjoyed Dicky had been when Marsden had given him the Pennington's approval.

Good Positions Open for Stenos

Stenography Offers Opportunities for Advancement by Contact With Business.

"The young man or woman who wants to enter business life, who must do so without capital and who does not know definitely in what branch they wish to specialize, would make no mistake in choosing stenography," says a Boyles college professor.

Parents' Problems

Should the interest of a boy of 11 in reading stories of thrilling adventure be curbed?

Provided that the adventures of these stories are healthy, that is to say dependent upon courage and guided by right, there would seem to be no reason why a boy's interest in reading them should be curbed.

Advance Steps Taken By Cornell College In Physical Training

Mount Vernon, Ia., Aug. 7.—The increasing recognition of the importance of physical development along with intellectual development which is being given by educational institutions has led Cornell college to take advance steps in regard to physical training for both women and men.

Director Finger, who is in charge of physical training for men and inter-collegiate athletics, is being reinforced by Gordon M. Morrison of Harvard university. He will also have the part time service of Arlo M. Sanderson '20, all-state tackle, and senior assistants.

The college office has also arranged to add Miss Mary I. Griffith, a recent graduate of the Chicago normal school of physical training, to the department for women and she will assist Miss M. Estelle Angier, department head, in caring for the physical welfare of the women of Cornell. They will be assisted in this work by Miss Gladys Pielips, R. N., who will co-operate from the health standpoint.
