More Truth Than Poetry

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

THE UNFAILING SYMPTOM

When you're prone to complain
That the neighbor's small boys
Will drive you insane
With their racket and noise;
When your fortitude fails,
And you grumble and roar
At the nocturnal wails
Of the baby next door,
When you frequently swear
That the world is all wrong,
You'd best have a care:
You are getting along.

When you fume and you fret
And your nerves get unstrung,
When you often forget
That you ever were young;
When you growl at your wife,
And you snarl at the cook,
And the troubles of life
Seem too dreadful to brook,
When you howl when it's hot
And complain when it's cold,
Deny it or not—
You've begun to get old.

Last symptom of all—
If you find that your glance
If it happens to fall
On a flapper, by chance,
Takes in all the features
Of coiffure and dress,
That causes the preachers
The keenest distress,
And the sight's so upsetting
Your eyes won't behave;
Be warned! you are getting
One foot in the grave!

Problems That Perplex

Answered by

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Persistent Young Woman.

Dear Miss Fairfax: We are two high school girls going on 15 years of age. We are in love with a fellow 17 years old. Three months ago he went on a trip. He wrote one of us a post card and said that he would not see us for two months. He did not give us his address. One day we met his sister and she told us his address. We wrote to him, but he did not answer for two weeks. During this time we wrote him a few letters. When he wrote to us he told us he couldn't write because he was busy, but would answer our letters quickly hereafter. Now he is home. When he sees us he smiles and acts as if he cared for us. Still, he does not talk to us. E. G.

Girls, girls, you should not write to young men when they give you such a broad hint. Naturally a young man would grow weary of girls who pursue like that.

Sacrificing Too Much.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I have been going about with a young man for three years, whom I love very much. He is going to establish a business and says he cannot take me out for quite some time, as he is in need of a large sum of money, and the only way he can save is to stay at home, to which I agreed.

Several days ago I met him with a crowd of men and he pretended he did not see me.

Do you think I should sacrifice all my time for him, after seeing him go out with his friends? ANXIOUS.

When a man goes out with other men, his share of expenses is for one and need not be at all large, for men can rough it and go to cheap restaurants where no man is likely to take a girl when he is trying to show her attention. But there's no reason why this man shouldn't come to see you, and there's equally no reason why, on seeing you, he should

What's What

By HELEN DECIE

In a small town where every one knows everybody, behavior need not be so formal as it must be in a metropolis crowded with all known and unknown varieties of men and women. A girl accustomed to the harmless friendliness of Main street in Hometown must be on her guard against strangers when she comes to a large city to study or to engage in "gainful occupation." Especially should she avoid the society of girls who are ready to flirt with men on the street or in public conveyances.

A well-bred girl ignores and, for her own safety, must ignore the male flirts who infest the corners of populous streets and ogle all the women passing by. The nice girl from Hometown should realize that the new "girl friend" who picks up men acquaintances in this way is essentially common, if not worse. Municipal social workers can tell many a sad tale about the ultimate tragedy of girls who are "not particular." Young girls cannot be too particular. Social conventions are established for their protection; for them good form is a moral safeguard.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of

"Revelations of a Wife"

Why Madge Was Certain of Just

What Dicky Wished.

For a long minute after I had asked "Why?" in answer to Dicky's assertion that Grace Draper was out of the question as a model for Pennington's book illustrations, my husband stared at me as if I suddenly had gone out of my mind. Then he took me by the shoulder and gripped it tightly.

"What do you mean?" he asked hoarsely, and I saw that the possibilities of regaining his apparently lost prestige which my query opened to him had shaken him.

"Simply this," I returned quietly. "Marsden says that Pennington's idea of his heroine was based consciously or unconsciously upon the illustrations of 'Day Dream,' posed by Grace Draper. He is dissatisfied, not with your work on his new book, but by your conception of his heroine, for which another and less competent model posed. If you did the drawings over with Grace Draper as a model, don't you think he might be satisfied?"

"There's no doubt about it," Dicky answered promptly. "But—"

"Please don't interrupt me," I said, with a smile. But never in my life have I forced a smile and gay banter with so much effort. My heart was as lead within me at Dicky's prompt admission. I had hoped, somehow, that he would answer my question in the negative. "I asked you a question just now which you have not answered," I went on evenly. "You said that Grace Draper was out of the question, and I asked you 'Why?' I repeat it now. Why do you consider her out of the question?"

He looked at me oddly. "You ought to know my chief reason," he said.

Delta Gammas to Attend League Luncheon

Mrs. Winfield Smith, who will speak to the District League of Women Voters at luncheon Thursday at the Chamber of Commerce, will be especially honored by her sorority sisters while here. Mrs. Smith was a member of Delta Gamma at the University of Wisconsin. Miss Louise Curtis of Omaha became acquainted with Mrs. Smith at the national convention of their sorority in California six years ago. The local Delta Gammas have reserved a table at the luncheon. They will take Mrs. Smith for a drive over the city during the afternoon.

Reservations for the luncheon are expected to reach the "100" mark by Thursday noon. Seventy-five have already been made through Mrs. Charles J. Hubbard and Mrs. H. J. Bailey. Anyone interested in good government is invited to attend.

Beat slightly two whole eggs and the yolks of two eggs, reserve whites for the meringue. Add sugar and salt. Gradually add scalded milk, stirring constantly. Cook in double boiler until mixture thickens enough to coat a spoon. Mixture must be stirred while cooking or it will curdle. When cold, add pineapple and cherries. Beat the two egg whites stiff and spread over the top, place in a very hot oven long enough to brown.

A Secret Anxiety.

Dicky laughed, but there was a tender, remorseful note in the laughter.

"No, you can bet your last dollar on that," he said, drawing me to him in a quick-passionate embrace. "Nor could any other woman," he added, with such certainty in his tones that I felt the tension around my heart loosen a bit for the first time since I had read Marsden's letter. But let's not talk about impossibilities any more. We do not even know where she is, and if we did, I couldn't have her pose for me with Lil and your father and Faith—Grantland on the job. They probably know every step she's taking."

Nothing so indicated to me Dicky's secret anxiety to secure the girl for a model as his stumbling reference to Hugh Grantland. He inadvertently had begun the sneering cognomen, "Faithful Fido," but had changed it swiftly. That he wished to take no chance of angering his wife was patent, and my heart, warmed by the assurance he had just given me, chilled again at this evidence of his ability to be politic when he wished, even to the extent of suppressing his sneers against Hugh Grantland.

"He must be extraordinarily anxious to keep me in the mood for sacrifice," I thought bitterly. Then, womanlike, I jumped to the mere pleasant conclusion that his courtesy and sense of justice had triumphed
