Women Voters to Invite Noted Speaker

Hon. A. J. Beveridge of Indiana will be invited to speak to the Omaha League of Women Voters, December 30, on the direct primary, following his appearance before the Nebraska State Bar association the day previous. This was decided at the luncheon held at the Chamber of Commerce Thursday at which Mrs. H. J. Bailey, district director, presided. Mrs. Draper Smith will write the letter of invitation.

The League of Women Voters is backing the direct primary, world peace and the Shepard-Towner maternity bill. Mrs. Winfield Smith of Seattle, Wash., was the chief speaker at the Thursday luncheon. Referring to the Shepard-Towner maternity bill, she said: "The league is backing only one measure at a time. When this bill has passed both houses, we will turn our eyes to some other legislation."

Mrs. C. G. Ryan

This bill passed the senate recently, and will be taken up in the house following the present recess. Nebraska congressmen are said to favor it.

The word "disarmament" is a misnomer, according to Mrs. Smith. "Reduction of armaments is all that we can hope for," she said.

"The League of Women Voters was formed not to get a unified vote nor to further political measures, but primarily to educate women voters," Mrs. Smith declared.

Mrs. C. G. Ryan of Grand Island, Housemaids in Germany receive on an average of $2.40 a month.

Dr. Alfred Schlack will have seven guests at dinner Saturday evening. E. B. Wirt will have a party of eight at luncheon Saturday.

Fashion Notes

A strong Russian tendency is manifested in fur-trimmed and street suits.

Lynx is a decided favorite in the use of fur as a trimming.

Many of the new wraps display a shawllike treatment with slits for the arms.

Fans fashioned of black lace and finished with dripping streamers are smart.

A costume composed of a satin skirt and leather overblouse is something new and smart.

Many of the night robes boast the off-the-shoulder effect now so popular in evening dresses.

Bateau necklines and plain bodices very often attached at a dropped waistline to very full skirts are smart.

state president, discussed the league calendar which will be on sale in a few months. It will be an "all-Nebraska" publication including art and quotations from such famous representatives of the state as Gustav Borglum, Robert Gilder, Herbert Johnson, Willis Cather, Rollin Kirby, A. L. Bixby, T. Lieurance, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Dwight Kirsch, Lawton Parker, Grant Renard, Anna S. Richardson, John Neihardt and W. J. Bryan. It will be 10 by seven inches in size and will be sold at $1. This price will leave a margin for profit to the league.

Seated at the speaker's table, which had a centerpiece of golden glow, were Mesdames Winfield Smith, C. G. Ryan, her mother, Mrs. M. Murphy of Omaha; Charles J. Hubbard, local league chairman; C. E. Johannes, prominent in the league and president of the Omaha Woman's club; J. E. Wallace, president of the Association of Collegiate Alumnae; Misses Vivian Griffith, Eva Roberts of Los Angeles, Marjorie Selleck of Lincoln and Louise Curtis of Omaha. The last three named are Delta Gamma sorority sisters of Mrs. Smith, the honor guest. Other Delta Gammas attending were Mesdames Irving Custer, Arthur Draper Smith, W. C. Ramsey, Misses Dorothy Wright and Helen Nieman.

More than 100 prominent Omaha women attended the luncheon.

Housemaids in Germany receive on an average of $2.40 a month.

HOLDING A HUSBAND

Adele Garrison's New Phase of "Revelations of a Wife"

How Dicky Solved One Angle of the Grace Draper Problem.

Dicky stopped suddenly in his striding up and down the tiny level space upon the top of the hill, ran his fingers through his abundant hair twice, tossed a troublesome forelock back, and came up to the car. That he had decided the question of having or not having Grace Draper as model, I knew, for his actions were characteristic of his moments of decision, and my throat constricted with actual physical pain while I waited for him to speak.

"I suppose, as long as you're willing," he began lamely, almost shamefacedly, then straightened himself, put his hands upon my shoulders and looked steadily down into my eyes.

"It's Up to You."

"It's up to you, old girl, absolutely," he said. "I won't deny that getting her back as a model for these particular drawings would mean an awful lot to me. I probably never would need her again, for while there are plenty of fussy, old-maid-like Penningtons in the book world, there is no one but Pennington with prestige enough to be able to carry things through with so high a hand. But in this particular emergency I don't deny she would be a life-saver. If Pennington is pleased I'll be the white-haired boy with Percy again, and as he gives me over half my work, that's some item—to say nothing of where I'd be if it got blurted around, as it surely would, that Pennington had refused my stuff, and Percy had turned me down."

"Why annoy yourself with dwelling upon unpleasant things that are never going to happen?" I said courageously. "She will undoubtedly be glad to pose for you again."

"It is not a question of her, but of you," Dicky retorted. "I know you've said you are willing, and it's perfectly bully of you to propose it, but if this thing is going to cause you any annoyance or unpleasantness, I'm not going through with it."

His voice was sincerity itself, and I knew that he believed what he said, but I could not help the caustic little reflection that if I took him at his word and rescinded the permission I had given he would be distinctly resentful.

"There will be neither annoyance nor unpleasantness for me, I am sure," I said steadily. "So let's not discuss that phase of it any longer."

What Madge Asked Herself. "All right, you bully girl!" He pulled me to him roughly, kissed me warmly, and spoke with crisp decision as he finished:

"Understand one thing. I neither interview this dame nor have her pose for those illustrations without you or mother or someone equally alert present. She's no doubt the original repentant sinner at the mourners' bench, but she's a trifle too foxy to be thoroughly trustworthy, and I'm not going to risk having her trying the stunt on you she did before."

He shrugged his shoulders as if he were throwing off an unpleasant memory, and, indeed, I well knew from my own feeling what must be his aversion to any thought of that old time.

"Now the next thing," he said briskly, "is to decide where she shall stay while I make the necessary sketches. That is, of course, provided she consents. Let's see, this Wednesday. If you write today we can hardly expect a letter before Friday at the latest. Well! That will give me plenty of time. If I know her decision before I go on Monday, that's all I need. But we'd better decide where she's to stay before you write her, so that you can give her all the data."

"Yes, of course," I returned, a bit absently, for my brain was busy with this new and vexing problem of where to house Grace Draper. Of all the bizarre situations, I thought to myself sardonically, that I should be revolving this problem in my mind!

"Of course, she can't be seen in this neighborhood," Dicky said thoughtfully, "on account of Dad and Lil. How you're ever going to manage them anyway, I don't see. But you've said to leave it to you, and I'm the most obedient husband in captivity. And she ought not to travel on the trains or highways leading out of here if what she says about being shadowed is true. At that, she ought to be able to elude the sleuths at that end; they haven't drawn any cordon around her, I fancy," his voice held heavy sarcasm, and I knew that he secretly resented the espionage which Hugh Grantland and Allen Drake were keeping up on my account. "It's near you that they'll look for her if she's missing from her accustomed haunts, therefore—I have it—Shelter Island!"

He struck his closed fist on his knee, a little habit of his when he has solved a vexing problem.

"I must be getting aphasia that I didn't think of that before," he said with disgust. "She can come to Shelter Island from Greenport, crossing the ferry, while we motor over from here across the North Haven ferry from Sag Harbor. She can get a taxi or a street car from Hempstead to Mineola, take the middle island line out, and never be seen on the south shore route at all. And there's the bulkiest little hotel in the woods out there, frequented by old people, nervous cases and sometimes by those who would rather escape observation. It's an ideal place for her to stop. I'll give you all the dope now, so you can write to her as soon as possible."

I took a little pad and pencil from my bag, preparing to take his data down. And as I did so, I could not help a little curious wonder that Dicky should be so familiar with the various entrances to Shelter Island, and its possibilities for staging romance and intrigue.

Sewing on Snap Fasteners. In sewing on snap fasteners, the edges sometimes are so sharp and rough that the thread cuts in a short time. Try this way of sewing them on: Sew from hole to hole, forming a square, never allow the thread to go over the edge of snap. You will find it an improvement, as there is nothing to cut the thread.
