What's What

There are two ways of eating boiled eggs. The English custom, which is also followed in Canada and in some other countries, is to place the egg in an egg cup especially constructed for the purpose, and to take off the "cap" or smaller end of the shell with a spoon.

When an American orders boiled eggs in any hotel, club or restaurant in the United States, he knows that the waiter, having ascertained whether the order is to be soft-boiled, hard-boiled or medium, conveys them to the kitchen cooked to the guest's taste, and then breaks them into an egg-glass much the shape of the English egg-cup, but three times as large. The guest eats them from this glass with an ordinary teaspoon.

Things You'll Love To Make.

While crocheting is so popular make a crocheted silk lampshade. Crochet a fillet insertion two inches wide that will fit around the top of a silk-covered wire shade. Leave drop-stitching enough to reach within three inches of the bottom edge of the shade. Then crochet a three-inch fillet insertion to fit the bottom circumference of the shade. Finish the edge with a narrow scallop. Made of silk of a color to match the color scheme of the boudoir, with a contrasting color silk under it, this crocheted silk lampshade makes a stunning gift.

Problems That Perplex

Shaking Hands. For a woman to offer her hand for her to convey a sign of cordial welcome of the acquaintance; but in formally fashionable society none but a hostess pursues this course. A nod, a smile, and a murmur of the name constitute full recognition of an introduction in the eyes of many who regard their bearing as the expression of the most correct form and who look upon an offer of hand-shaking as a mark of impulsive provincialism.

Moody Man is Difficult. "Dear Miss Fairfax: I am a girl of 20 and have been going with a fellow for several months. He is a good clean young man and has been nice to me. He has not gone with any other girls since he met me, although I told him he was not obliged to stay at home when it was impossible for me to be in his company. Sometimes he acts a little indifferent and again he is so nice and I can't quite understand him. Perhaps it's my fault. I may not be so interesting one time as another. I don't like these moods of his. I try acting somewhat indifferent myself and then he seems to make up, as you might say, but I don't like to do this, as I am afraid that some day he will tire of it. I like to keep his friendship and be square with him as he has been with me, but wish he wouldn't get his moods." EVELYN.

Some people are just born with moods, and they are as miserable for them as folk who must associate with them. The best treatment is to ignore them. Don't pamper them or notice them. Certainly don't encourage them. A moody man is a difficult mate to live with—so you would better begin your ignoring his caprices right away.

A Puzzled Girl: You are young to marry; it seems to me you would do no harm, and possibly some good, if you were to wait a year for the wedding bells. Whether or not another young man should be allowed you to marry, should depend upon your feeling in the matter as well as that of your fiancé.

Jealousy: Since you are not engaged to the young man you are jealous of, I cannot see that you have a right to object to his attentions to other girls. You say he is always a perfect gentleman when with you. It may be you like him better than he likes you, or that you have different ways of showing affection. My advice to you is not to demand more than is within your right or reason. If you want to keep his regard, be fair and liberal.

Congresswoman Is Flayed by Noted Suffragist

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, president of the National American Woman Suffrage association, in a statement concerning the stand taken by Representative Alice Robertson of Oklahoma, on the appointment of a woman to the conference to reduce armaments, flays Miss Robertson for her statements and also suggests a woman, Lucia Ames Mead of Boston, who, in her opinion, is eminently fitted to take a place at the conference.

Mrs. Catt says: "Miss Robertson, M. C., announces that no woman should be appointed on the forthcoming disarmament conference because no woman is qualified."

"It will be remembered that Miss Robertson was a small town anti-suffragist. She didn't know much of women or their achievements then and evidently congress has given her no new light. "The facts are that there are many women who are qualified. If that conference fails to bring forth definite, clear cut, constructive results, there will be a worldwide despair; and if it fails it will be for the want of a quality which very many women possess and which has considerably atrophied in politicians who will largely compose the conference. The longer their service the more complete the atrophy; the quality is known as backbone. The need of backbone in that conference is infinitely more important than military training or knowledge of international law. "There are women, however, who possess all the requisite qualifications as applied to men plus backbone. Perhaps the most eminently well qualified is a woman who is minded. If he asks you to marry him, you would then have the right to tell him that it hurts you when he goes with other girls. If he really cared for you he would stop it for your sake, though I think under those circumstances he would not stop by his own preference.

An Old Time Smoke House

In Earlier Days

In former times, when the town butcher or farmer himself dressed and cured the meat for the community, he could not always tell how it would turn out.

His methods were crude; partly traditional, partly guesswork. His tests were few and inconclusive.

Meat packing of today, as carried on by Swift & Company, has changed all that. It is scientific. Nothing is left to chance; nothing taken for granted.

The most painstaking care and attention are given to every step. Processes are worked out on a large scale with minute exactness. Methods are continually revised and improved. Cleanliness is insisted upon. Drastic, incessant inspections are the order of the day.

Swift products are uniform, graded according to quality. Take bacon, for instance.

Swift & Company set out years ago to make a delicious, savory bacon which should be uniformly excellent.

The result is Swift's Premium Bacon, always the same, always famously good. Today this bacon, wrapped, sealed and branded, has circled the world. Swift & Company's system of distribution carries it to places which the "town butcher" or the farmer could not reach.

completely familiar with the armament equipment of every nation, the treaty relations between countries, and who knows the history of every effort to effect permanent peace forward and back. She is calm and judicious in manner and mind. No member of the conference will be better equipped with facts or philosophy. She knows how to listen, but can eloquently defend her position. She is, we believe, a nonpartisan.

"Will a given policy accrue to the advantage of republican or democratic party, is a question which would not interest her should another suggest it. She would, however, never lose sight of the necessity of guarding the interest and the honor of our common country, and she would never forget nor let any one else forget that the primary business of a disarmament conference is to find a way to disarm."

"That woman is Lucia Ames Mead of Boston. Probably Miss Robertson never happened to hear of her, but most other people know her and her qualifications. Those who wish to urge the appointment of a woman would do no better than to support Mrs. Mead. Is she a candidate? Not at all; but she is too consecrated a friend of peace to decline so important a call to duty should the invitation be extended to her."—N. Y. Sun.

Tomato Fruit Salad. This is a very unusual salad and particularly good. Remove the stem ends from four tomatoes, peel and remove the hard centers. Mix together half a cupful of finely diced canned pineapple, an equal quantity of chopped crisp celery, a tablespoonful of chopped nut meats and a small diced banana. Moisten the filling with boiled dressing, fill into the tomatoes and chill on the ice. Serve each on bed of crisp.

Passing Smokes to Girls. These days it is difficult for the average man to know whether or not to offer the girl he is with a cigarette when he passes around his case. If she doesn't smoke she is likely to feel insulted if he offers her one. "I don't pass around the smokes any more," said the young man who made a particular study of the finer shades of deportment. "When I want a smoke at a dance, for instance, I leave the case on the table. I nod my head in general invitation and the girls can take one if they like or let them alone."
