Dishes and a Cigaret. I face my day with philosophic calm. Dishes a mountain high invade my sink. And other tasks unnumbered wait their turn.

What of it? I inquire of the world. Blithely I mind myself of how Eve span. Doubtless, I say, even the G-acchirent their togas now and then.

And I do. That its foul polluting work is done. Moments there are for which there are no words.

And crisis for which no philosophy waits. If I had had half the courage that sustained Judas.

In his final hour. And a stout piece of rope. Other hands than mine would have finished washing those dishes.

I am not one to wear my heart upon my sleeve. Or air my family linen on the village green.

And yet I am consumed with a desire to know. If other women's husbands Park their abandoned cigarettes.

In decent self-respecting coffee-cups.—Edith B. Allen in the Woman Citizen.

Things You'll Love To Make.

To match crocheted draperies you will want to make a crocheted wrosted bedspread. You need an oblong to fit the top of your bed, two straight valances for the sides and one for the foot of the bed if it is an iron bedstead or a post bed. Another straight piece can be made as a bolster throw. Crochet a simple filet mesh. Dot the top with a small flower or geometric figure as shown. Have a border of the figures around the valances. Join a wrosted tassel to each point of the valances. A crocheted wrosted bedspread gives a very quaint effect to a bedroom.

Lavishness Versus Vulgarly

There is but one step between the lavish and the contemptible. To entertain our guests by offering a bountiful repast is but a sign of hospitality, but to ask them to a table that groans under the weight of more food than could possibly be eaten at a meal, expensive flowers and priceless silver is to show ourselves lacking in good breeding.

and our entrance into it for American hostesses to learn that lavishness was silly if not wicked. Already the results have been excellent. The many course dinner is entirely out of vogue. So, too, is the afternoon tea that is as bountiful as an old-fashioned dinner and much more elaborate. Well bred hostesses are no longer serving bouillabaisse, patties, salads, French pastries and ices at afternoon receptions. For the afternoon bridge party or other entertainment the rule among leading women in every community is either for no refreshments or a "one course" refreshment. If an ice is served, then there is no salad before it. If hot chocolate is selected, then there would be merely wafers or small cakes, and if tea or coffee is served a light sandwich would complete the refreshments.
