Holding a Husband Adele Garrison's New Phase of Revelations of a Wife

What Dicky's Telegram Told Madge. You'll let me hear, Dicky, the min-ute you know," I pleaded.

The train whistled in the distance, the train which was to hear him to New York, and the verdict of Pennington, the author, whose rejection of his drawings had meant so much

"How can I let you know any sooner than a letter can reach you?" he demanded irritatedly. "There's no telephone at the farm, and they won't deliver a telegraph message that far, will they?"

"I'll attend to having the message delivered," I said quietly, "if you'll only send it. Remember, dear, I'm as anxious as you are about this." "I know," he said contritely, stooping to kiss me good-bye as the train drew in. I'll send you a wire the minute I can get away from the conference after they decide. But conference after they decide. But I'm not worrying. It wasn't the work Pennington kicked on, but the back and Miss Foster for the face, everything will be all right, I'm

"All Right, Goose!"

"Hurry, hurry!" I admonished wildly, for Dicky always waits until the train begins to move before boarding it, a proceeding that invariably upsets me.

"All right, Goose!" He kissed me again, swung lazily aboard the train, and waved smilingly at me from the platform. I bent to the switch key of my car with blurred ofes for a minute, wondering at my own weak-Washington, Sept. 2.-President ness the while. Partings with Dicky Harding's conterence on unemploy- for so brief a period as his projected ment will be called for some time trip promised have become commonplace as the years have rolled on. But this one had brought a sudden said that plans for the conference feeling of overwhelming loneliness, are being expedited as much as pos- a shadow of foreboding for which

I gave the head painter a type-written list with samples attached of the different papers and ceiling tints I wished used in the various rooms. Dicky and I had spent most of the preceding day in consultation To Idle After Monday over the wallpaper samples we had > concerning it, and I went on to the Ticer farm with the comforting assurance that I had no loose stitches

"I think you may count on getting your furniture in next Saturday. the man in charge had assured me. "This is Monday. Now, let—me—see. Yes, that will give time for the drying. It's only a question of that. Thanks to the strike, we have plenty of workers." With spirits as cheered as they could possibly be with the shadow of Grace Draper upon them, I went n search of my mother-inlaw. I told her the good news, which she greeted with an incredulous sniff, then sat down resolutely to the hemming of draperies, in order that I might keep under control my speculations concerning the success or failure of Dicky's errand.

I knew that I need expect nothing until afternoon, as Dicky would not reach the city until nearly 10 o'clock in the morning. But it was almost 4 o'clock before the expected wire arrived. I tore it open feverishly, and then did not know whether my treacherous heart was glad or sorry at the news it contained. "Everything absolutely o. k. Everybody satisfied with my proposition. Must stay here for a week. Please advise both girls to be ready one week from Wednesday for work. Love "DICKY." So he was committed to the long hours of posing with Grace and Claire Foster. I did not know which association I dreaded the more for him. After I had destroyed the telegram-I had bribed Jerry Ticer to watch for the taxi driver and deliver the yellow envelope to me without Mother Graham's seeing it-I sat for an hour in my room behind locked doors, a prey to all the fears and doubts which I had rigidly repressed for so long.

A knock at the door and my mother-in-law's imperative voice effectively roused me. "What in the world are you locked in here for?" she demanded. "Robert Savarin is downstairs. He says Lil-
