The Unexpected.

I was down on the ground, grov-eling on it, tearing at the grass, while before my tortured brain flitted vis-ims of my sheltered baby wanger. glare of a lantern in my eyes and Jim's shoulder supporting me. Katie was kneeling by me, chafing one of my hands, upon which I could feel her hot tears falling, and Grace Draper was rubbing my other hand. The lantern was held by a young man I never had seen before, and its rays danced for an instant fantastically upon Grace Draper's face, giving it for an instant a sinister, mocking, almost gloating look that made me shiver and moan. But when I had struggled back to sanity and remembrance I realized that it must have been the glow of the lantern that had misled me, for there was nothing save the most comprehending sympathy in the gaze she bent on me as I struggled to an erect

"Junior!" I exclaimed wildly. "I must keep on calling him. He might hear me." But the effort to rise exhausted me, and, faint to the point of nausca, I sank back against Jim. Draper bent over me and took my hands firmly in hers.

"Listen, Madge," she said.

"You have been so brave, don't fail your child now. You simply must keep up your strength, for I think your mother-in-law will die if she sees that you have given up. She's in an awful condition, now that the darkness has come. Mrs. Ticer is with her, and she's calling for you and her, and she's calling for you and Dicky. Now. I can stay out here and call Junior just as well as you. He knows my voice, you know. And you must get to the house and be taken care of and see to your mother-in-law."

For the moment I was without will or volition. I permitted her to pull me up to a standing position, felt Katie's arm around me. Jim sup-porting me on the other side. Then the young man with the lantern spoke in a low tone to Jim: "Don't you think we'd better carry

"No, no," I protested feebly, then vacantly I queried: "Who are you?" A Compelling Personality.

"Just some one to help," he re-turned deferentially, boyishly—I saw that he was in his early twenties, yet with an air of manliness and decision far beyond his years, the air which so many of our young many of so many of our young men wear to-day, the result of their war expe-rience. "We'll talk about it later. Just now I'll hold the lantern so you won't stumble."

"Is your's lighted?" He turned to Grace Draper.
"Yes." She had been busy with a second lantern, and now swung it,

You aren't afraid out here?" perfunctorily.

"Not a bit," she said promptly.

Ideal Want Ad Weather

Like many other salesmen, Bee want ads are influenced by the weather, especially certain classifications.

Take, for example, the Houses and Cottages for rent, Furnished Rooms, Real Estate and other classifications that require outside investigation.

It is an easy matter to coax people out when the weather is cool and agreeable.

Your want ad placed in next Sunday's Bee will bring you a maximum of results.
