Problems That Perplex

Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Is He Fair?

Miss Beatrice Fairfax: I have a little matter that I would like your opinion on. I have a very dear friend, a widow. I am a widower. We have been the best of friends for five years. We are not engaged, but have expected to be married. She has a sister living in Denver and went there to live. An old friend of her family is living there, and his wife took sick; he got her to stay with them during her sickness and death. He has a daughter, 13. After his wife's death he told her he needed her in his home. He got a housekeeper and she continued staying there for two years and had employment in the city. He took her about considerable. She says he never made any proposals of any kind to her, and that they are only friends.

My, but you're a cowardly sort! You have gone with this woman for five years and intend to marry her (when YOU get ready) and yet you don't even consider yourself engaged to her. What right have you to criticize one for whom you show so little consideration.

Don't you know that there is nothing in the world a woman of 50 wants so much as her own home. You were not thoroughbred enough to give her this. What could be more natural than she should remain where she found a home where she was needed, and where she really could take charge of things, with a housekeeper to do the work and a girl of 13 to rear. The surprise to me is that she ever left it. It is much to her credit that she got along so well that they were glad to have her back for a visit. No doubt the place seems more like home to her, after managing it for two years, than her sister's place.

If you mean to marry this woman, why don't you do it? A woman of 50 can't daily along forever. You may lose a good wife by waiting. You trust this woman or you wouldn't want to marry her. Prove your trust by your conduct.

Dear Miss Fairfax: I year ago I met a nice, home-loving fellow who I soon grew to like. We lived quite a distance apart, but by corresponding our friendship deepened. A month ago I invited him and a friend over the week-end, as a girl friend was with me at the time. My girl friend made quite a fuss over the man I like. I haven't heard from him for a month, but I see this girl friend of mine quite often and barbaric custom. Earrings are all sold nowadays with tiny screws to adjust them. Yes, I like them ever so much on some people. There are types they are tremendously becoming to, in season and out. On the other hand, there are women who make themselves common looking with quite inoffensive looking earrings. Whether they are to be hoop or pendant or close fitting ornaments has to be decided before the mirror and with the individual face the main resultant. I could not advise you without an idea of your type.

Practically all the women in Germany are going in for athletics and have become members of some athletic association.
