

The Web That Is Spun to Get You

AN OPERA comes, an opera goes, and nobody knows the promoter's woes.

But Mrs. Lucien Stephens, publicity chairman for the Tuesday Musical club, which is bringing the Scotti Grand Opera company here next Thursday evening, doesn't regard her tasks as woes.

The casual opera attendant has little conception of the web that is spun to get him there.

Window cards aplenty must adorn downtown shops. These come to Mrs. Stephens already printed, but by a local printer.

Are the bill boards neglected? No. Even though this advertising medium is considered unsightly by some, it is less objectionable than an unfilled auditorium.

The correspondence and telephone calls involved are small consumers of time and energy.

All these things, circulars, posters and correspondence, are matters of detail, and though they take hours and hours of time they are not entirely the secret of good publicity.

A good publicity chairman sees that there is news value in the fact that a woman arose at 4:30 in the morning in order to be first in line at the seat sale.

A good publicity chairman, in fact, sees the news value in the common things. She must have imagination and enthusiasm.

SEEING the news value in ordinary events is like seeing beauty in common things.

"She was a battered woman now, not a lovely girl, but she still had that something that fires the imagination, could still stop one's breath for a moment by a look or gesture that somehow revealed the meaning in common things.

AERIAL sanatoriums may be a reality in the near future.

Life is never dull for one with appreciation of the common things.

From Peacock Pie to Ham and Eggs

"Us ke paa bunder ke mou hai" remarked the little girl from India to her Canadian father, which is, being interpreted, "That man has a face like a monkey."

But that was long ago. Miss Corpron, a tall, slim girl of 19, is living in Omaha now with her aunt, Mrs. Charles Nye, and next year when her family come to this country on a furrough she intends to go to the University of Michigan.

It is quite a jump from peacocks to ham and eggs, but that is the change Miss Corpron has had to make in her breakfast menu.

Miss Corpron has had to make in her breakfast menu. "We always had 'chota hazir,' or the little breakfast in bed, just tea and toast, but the big breakfast was at 11:30, and we used to have all the game we wanted—pheasants and venison, and especially peacocks.

in vacation time when O was at home we used to play tennis and ride a great deal. I drove a car, too, but you had to get a license in India, one day a monkey jumped down out of a tree right on top of the car.

In India "tying the marriage knot" is a literal proceeding. Miss Corpron described a wedding which she went to, and though she and her family were seated in a large and adequate hall, the ceremony was that of orthodox Hindoos. The bride and groom, mere children, sat on gold-embroidered velvet cushions 10 feet apart, and after the priests had gone through various ritual they tied a sacred cord around the heads of the young couple and tightened the knot until they were sitting quite close to one another, symbolic, of course, of the union. The bride's unfortunate father had to set up a wedding feast for 1,000 guests, and, moreover, he had to support and educate his newly acquired son-in-law.

Dr. Corpron began doing his operating under the trees. Since then he has built up a hospital containing several wards and 50 private rooms. Of course, he is short-handed and has solved the nursing problem in a unique way. When a patient is given a private room he is told to get some relative to come and take care of him. His diet is prescribed and he is told if he touches his sterilized bandages he will probably die. The doctor, he said, has subsequent rounds frequently finds some 17 regulations, a goat and chickens in the room, but the patient usually thrives, being much happier in his own environment than if a trained nurse were hovering about.
