

Etiquette in the Home

By LORETTO C. LYNCH.

Some people imagine they can save their good manners for occasions, forgetting that good breeding calls for good manners as part of one's daily life.

A boy from a family who never recognized the need for good manners within the home was sent away about a year ago by a devoted godmother to a military school. He returned recently upon his first vacation.

So respectfully did he arise when mother and sister entered the dining room that the coiffed, unshaven father and older brother did not have the courage to laugh at him.

The habit of taking 15 minutes before each meal to make himself presentable had become part of the boy. And just about now the others have caught the spirit. Perhaps in a couple of weeks from now they will wear their coats and soft collars as a mark of respect to the faithful little mother producer of the family meals.

And when you go to visit in the other woman's home—do you remember to write the "Bread and Butter Letter" after your visit? This may take the form of a few handwritten lines genuinely thanking the hostess for her hospitality. No matter what walk of life a guest occupies it is expected that this letter come.

I don't blame a hostess who told a pale-white lie over the phone when she said there was no one at her house to receive a certain young man. Mr. Young Man spent three weeks at this woman's home last summer. When the time arrived for him to depart, he carefully folded his bathing suit and casually remarked: "Well, it's long after all—there ain't nothin' like the city."

He lacked the courtesy to write the hostess—he made no effort to give a little treat in the way of a couple of theater tickets to the two ladies who had entertained him so hospitably—he was just a thoughtless, ill-bred young man and he wanted the world to know it.

Sometimes, of course, it is the hostess who displays bad manners. A rather well-to-do young matron invited a young woman to take dinner with her at her country estate. The guest was a bit dusty from travel and straightway went to clean up a bit. After 10 minutes of toilet making, the guest hastened to the dining room only to see the hostess presiding at the table with her hair done in curl papers and the rest of the family eating voraciously. The guest had not even been apprised of the fact that dinner was "served." Yet, I honestly believe that these things did not intend to offend. They were just ignorant of the simple laws of etiquette.

Recently I saw two women almost come to blows concerning the adoption of a little Polish emigrant boy. Each wanted him. He was not good-looking. His clothes were shabby. But his respectful manners made him a top to be near and good-looking children were passed-by, while both women wanted this well-mannered little 5-year-old.

Autumn.

Sing a song of autumn,
Tramping through the fields,
Drinking in the odors
That September yields.

Ribbons of witchhazel
'Neath the woodland trees,
Perfume the wild grape
Wafted on the breeze.

Corn-shocks rustling softly,
Pumpkins big and round,
Flocks of noisy blackbirds
Swirling to the ground.

Distant hills are hazy,
Oaks and maples red,
Sing a song of autumn
Ere the birds are fed.

—Tut.

Common Sense

By J. J. MUNDY.

Your fathers who have young sons, if you want the lads to be chummy with you, you have got to treat the boys like real pals.

If you are cross, bossy and arbitrary with them they are going to prefer other company.

Even at the best you can do, they will want to get out in the world of society their own age, therefore, the best way to interest them in yourself and make them forget the difference in age is to get acquainted.

Take the boys into your confidence intimately.

If you go for a hike, find out where the boys want to go.

Give that little growing man a chance to increase his ideas of the world by using some of his ideas in regards to your walks together or on his vacation.

No use to pump in things in which he has absolutely no interest.

Find out what your boy does like, and then lead him along to take in some of the things you like, and get together that way, not by ordering him to take what you select for him or get nothing.

Jewel, Flower, Color Symbols for Today

By MILDRED MARSHALL.

The ruby and the diamond are the rich combination made by today's talismans and natal stones. It is believed that those who wear a ruby will be possessed by the indistinguishable flame of ambition. It is also a gem which preserves the bodily and mental health of its wearer.

By use of the diamond it is believed that social ambitions can be achieved. Ancient superstition has it that the diamond possesses the power to lift its wearer out of obscurity to a place in the sun.

Light blue is the color assigned to this day. Since it is a hue belonging to Venus, wearing it is a good augury for lovers.

The gardenia is today's lucky flower, but it should never be worn by a blonde.

Many of the new fur wraps show a combination of brown trimming on black fur, kolinsky, sable and dyed squirrel being the most popular.

More Truth Than Poetry

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

HOPELESS

When informed by a learned eugenicist, That in going in quest of a wife, The lady to court was the sissy sort, Who had never been sick in her life, I made a proposal to Molly.

A maiden whose health is all right— Made of muscle and grit, and so physically fit She could give Mr. Dempsey a fight.

Then along came another eugenicist Who advised me to pick out a Jane Who, though lacking in grace and not much as to face, Would be there with a three-decker brain, And so I proposed to Triscilla.

Who may be a trifle antique, But who took five degrees with the greatest of ease And who thinks both in Sanscrit and Greek.

Still another eugenicist apprised me That beauty, one's aim ought to be. They needn't know brooks if they've just got the looks; Pick out a peach while you're picking," said he, So I asked for the hand of Patricia.

A damsel whose azure-eyed glance, If your own it should meet when she passed on the street, Would throw you straight into a trance.

And now I'm distressed to discover That the kind of a spouse one should find If the race is to be what eugenicists foresee Should have all of these features combined. I've got three fiancées already And my brain's in the dudge of a whirl. The wife that I need seems elusive indeed. For there never was any such girl!

Romance in Origin Of Superstitions

By H. I. KING.

The Wren.

It is an omen of good luck to have a wren build its nest near the house. This, with the exception that it is also considered in some sections bad luck to kill a wren, appears to be the only survival in this country of the mystic character which pertains to the wren in Europe and has so long attached to it there that Professor Frazer considers the ceremonies attending the wren superstition to have "come down from a very primitive paganism."

The ancient Greeks and Romans, the modern Italians, Spaniards, French, Danes, Swedes, English and Welsh, regard the killing of a wren as sure to bring disaster to the slayer. But notwithstanding such belief the annual custom of "hunting the wren" was to comparatively recent times universal throughout Europe and exists in a modified form in many sections today, as, for instance, in the Isle of Man, where, on St. Stephen's day, a wren is annually killed and buried after its body has been taken around the village and shown to the inhabitants.

The ceremony of killing the wren differed slightly in different countries, but was everywhere rather elaborate. This annual slaying of an animal considered sacred and not to be killed at other times is a custom found among many peoples still living in a primitive state, and was once common to primitive man. Frazer says: "The worshipful animal is killed with especial solemnity once a year and before or after death is carried from door to door, that each of his wor-

Where It Started

Up to the time of Elizabeth, stairs were constructed on the spiral plan, and special towers or "cases" were built to contain them. The straight stairs, or "flights" of stairs, were introduced in the latter part of Elizabeth's reign. A staircase, then, means strictly the inclosure of a spiral stair, not the stair itself. The word comes from the Saxon astigha, to mount; hence steghars, stayers, stairs.
