My Marriage Problems

The Advice Robert Savarin Gave Mrs. Rundle. Robert Savarin adjusted his eyeglasses and slowly scrutinized the group of canvases Mrs. Rundle had painted. Most of them were pretentious things, figure groups and single portraits, all framed in a style which I guessed, nay knew, had meant the sacrifice of necessary food and com-forts to the woman who had painted them. But among them were three or four unpretentiously framed small canvases which appealed to my love of color as the big canvases did not.

A branch of autumn leaves, with the sunlight on them, a corner of a garden showing flame-colored poppies bending to the breeze, another clump of statel foxgloves-1 turned Mrs. Rundle albeit reluctantly to express the admiration for the small canvases which was her due, when I heard her whisper tensely to "Those little things there are juspot-boilers to throw to the people without much money who come here. Lots of 'em like a splash of color, and so often those sell where the big and good pictures don't get a bid."

Robert Savarin's Verdict. She put her hand to her moath to still the tremble which had come to her lips as she watched Robert Savarin studying each picture closely, conscientiously. I suddenly had the sensation of being in a court room, waiting for the life or death verdict of a jury.

The artist finished his task, having apparently given to the tiniest canvas the same consideration he gave to the larger canvases. Then he turned to Mrs. Rundle, and I saw that his grave face was unusually animated. "You have three wonderfully good things here, Mrs. Rundle," he said with the sureness of a man who is master of his craft, an acknowledged authority upon his subject. "But," with a little comprehending smile,

"I am afraid you won't thank me for telling you what they are." She could not show her pallor, her make-up was too well put on, but I knew from her eyes that the blood had left her face and was racing to her heart in the suspense that was

"What-what-do you mean?" she asked, although I think she knew as well as Lillian and I did, what his meaning was. But it is bewildering to change one's whole life plan in a

"You have no future in figuresportraits—anything where you have to portray the human form, the ar-tist said. "These pictures," he in-dicated the ambitious canvases, may be sold at a good price some day, but it will be simply because of the reputation you will gain in doing bits like these—if you can stifle your ambition to be a portrait painter. You have a rare gift for color, and in the effect of life-by Jove! you can sed those poppies swaying."

I watched the woman's face and was relieved to see that after her first great disappointment she was beginning to take courage from Robert Savarin's admiration of the small canvases. "You think they ought to sell?" she asked with a timidity which I surmised was an entirely new emotion to her. "If the people here have any dis-crimination." His eyes swept the room and came back to Lillian. "Do you mind," he asked, remembering her wrathful denunciation of Mrs. Rundle for asking him to bid upon the pictures, "if I start the ball rolling for your friend by bidding? Of course, I will stop when I reach what I consider its worth, and you need have no fear, Mrs. Rundle. If no one else bids over me, I shall be proud to have one of these pictures in my days. Some of these will be much alone because they will do work of atrocious. But you'll see that she'll go on painting portraits till the end of her days."

I wondered if he could possibly be right in his dictum. It did not seem possible that any woman would throw away such advice. But in Mrs. Rundle's glance, when she came back from her consierence with Miss Corwin, there was a look of stubborn longing at her big canvases which made me wonder if Robert Savarin had not read her aright. And then Miss Corwin came quickly toward us, followed by an assistant and directed the taking from the wall of the canvas with the flame-colored poppies.

Topaz was set in the diadem of "Theban's Queen." According to ancient superstition the stone must be set in gold to exert its full power. It is believed to drive away groundless fears and misgivings and to put to rout financial worries. Its greatest virtue, according to the ancients, was in releasing its wearer cients, was in releasing its wearer from the power of another's stronger personality.

Lillian interposed quietly, "and ask to have these put up soon, for we have an engagement to meet friends at Palenville and cannot stay long."

Mrs. Rundle hurried away, and Lilian turned a radiant face to Robert Savarin.

"You dear!" she said softly. "That means life to her."

Midland College

Some of the people of Midland broke out in an attack of foot ballitis when the students became so enthusiatic that they hired trucks to transport several of their number to the scene of the game with Omaha.

The past week the dormitory behaved unusually well, in view of the fact that the preceptiess was absent and that the senior girls were in charge. Rules were more strictly kept than when the preceptress was here. The girls from the dormitory sent two delegates from their prissionary society to the L. M. S. convention that was held in Wayne. Whether by accident or design, the girls elected Miss Delhi as one of their delegates and Miss Arbhur Allen as the other. There has been no break in the routine of the dormitory.

Is Backache Crippling You

S that dull, nagging backache making it hard for you to get around? Are you lame, sore and tortured with sharp rheumatic pains at every step? It's time, then, you gave some attention to your kidneys! Nature, you know, has a way of warning you when all is not right with the bodily machinery. A dull, persistent backache is one of her first signals of kidney weakness. You may have daily headaches, too, with dizziness and annoying bladder irregularities. You are depressed and nervous—worn out and miserable. You feel years older than you are. Why let this condition continue? Kidney troubles, if treated early, are usually easily corrected. Neglected, the way is paved for dropsy, gravel, or, dreaded Bright's disease. Don't take this risk! Begin now with Doan's Kidney Pills. Doan's have helped thousands and should help you. Ask your neighbor.
