

Expense Budget Of University Cut $53,785.15

Reserve Fund Gets Share of Quarterly Appropriation—Increase Made in Expenditures.

Lincoln, Nov. 2.—(Special.)—University expending agencies must "skimp" through on $819,802.25 for the next three months. This is $53,785.15 less than they wanted to spend.

The original estimate for quarterly expenditures was $873,587.40. But until the supreme court orders otherwise Phil Bross, secretary of the department of finance and revenue, continues to insist that a certain percentage of the university appropriations be set aside as a reserve fund. Hence, the tidy sum of $53,785.15 reposing in the state treasury ready for emergencies which always assail institutions and which in years past have been met by deficiency appropriations by certain institutions.

Despite the "trimming" given the university requests by Bross, the institution obtained $88,249.25 more for this quarter than it did the last quarter. The expenditures for the last quarter were $731,553.

Classifications showing the percentages of expenditures of the quarter for various items of expense follow:

Salaries and wages, 24 1/2 per cent; supplies, 10 1/2 per cent; expense, 6 per cent; repairs, 1 1/2 per cent; equipment, 3 1/4 per cent; lands and buildings, 2 1/2 per cent; public improvements, 4 7/8 per cent; fixed charges, 3 1/4 per cent; revolving fund, 1/2 per cent.

Girl Rushed to Omaha Hospital in Airplane Return to Arapahoe

Jean Richards, 12, who was saved from probable death by being rushed to Omaha from her home at Arapahoe five weeks ago in an airplane driven by her uncle, Robert M. Cochran, returned to her home yesterday. An acute attack of appendicitis called for a hurried operation and the mother appealed to her nephew, who was a flying instructor during the war, to take the child to a hospital.

Braving an unfavorable wind the mother sat in the cockpit with her daughter in her arms while the bumping, vaulting airplane careened toward Omaha, 250 miles away, at two miles a minute.

Noise of the motor prevented the mother comforting her child on the two-hour trip. She told afterward that she spent her time in praying that the ship move still faster.

John Gamble Appeals for Salvation Army Campaign

An appeal, especially to companies and groups in the city, to support the Salvation Army campaign this week was issued yesterday by John W. Gamble, local treasurer, in view of the fact that subscriptions, totaling only $300, were received Tuesday.

"The Salvation Army" has no funds to continue its work in this city. The new Rescue home at Sixteenth and Grace must be completed and furnished," he urged.

"At present the army is operating in Omaha on borrowed money and unless Omaha responds to their plea in this campaign relief work, as well as that noble assistance given by the Rescue home, must be greatly curtailed."

Embryo Ad Writers Visit Bee Engraving Department

Forty members of the Y. M. C. A. class in advertising, headed by their instructor, E. L. Holland, were taken through the Bee's engraving department yesterday by the manager, F. W. Hadley, who explained and demonstrated each operation from the photograph to the finished cut.

AT THE THEATERS

OF THE new vaudeville show which opens at the Empress today, a feature act is the "Three Moran sisters" in which the three Moran sisters are to present a vocal and instrumental number embracing piano, violin, trombone and violin solos, duets and trios. Another featured act is to be presented by Harry Berry and Miss, who mix youth, magnetism and versatility in a refreshingly clean-cut and original manner.

My Marriage Problems

Adole Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

What Ted Whispered to Pa Cosgrove.

Despite my resentment against Bess Dean because of her behavior since coming uninvited to spend her vacation at the Cosgroves' with us, I could have hugged her for the opportunity she has given me to drive Dicky's big car on the fishing expedition.

As I slipped into the driver's seat I thrilled as I always do when I put my hands upon the wheel, and then I turned the starting key. That key to me always unlocks a new world, a fascinating world, where one's brain and fingers are pitted against possible disaster, a world which calls for an alertness, a technique different from that required by the purely domestic routine.

I especially love to drive the car where driving is difficult, in traffic on bad roads, along dangerous stretches. The mere act of driving is to me excitement, danger, gambling with fate, the adventure which life denies to women, especially those who have "married and settled down." I wonder if that isn't the reason why these later years see so many women drivers? This "settling down" process may be wholesome, but for some it does lack zest and flavor.

I was glad, too, of the maneuver which had put Bess Dean, instead of Dicky, in the seat beside me. She knows nothing about driving, therefore I had no fear of her criticism. But Dicky is one of those motorists who drive their cars especially hard when some other person is at the wheel. When I am driving with Dicky beside me I know that subconsciously he feels his feet upon the brake and clutch, his hands mentally upon the wheel, and he is watching tensely, apprehensively, every movement of mine and of the car, as well as keeping a wary eye upon the speedometer.

Bess Dean settled in the seat beside me and turned at a stony, laughing face to me, a face from which she had banished every trace of the chagrin and discomfiture which had flashed across it when Dicky had effectually countered her scheme for sitting beside him.

A Laughing Threat. "I break the 10th commandment every time I look at you at the wheel of a car, Madge," she said. "You look so contented, so sleek and satisfied, some way."

"I'll stand for anything but 'sleek,' Bess," I warned her, laughing. "That savors too much of the cat and the upset cream pitcher, and I don't allow anyone to call me that without dumping her beside the road."

"I started the car as I began speaking, and was several rods down the road as I finished, skirting one of the precipitous gullies which make driving in the mountains so interesting."

"Better keep quiet, Miss Dean," Ted sang out gayly. "It wouldn't be very good dumping just here."

"I'll talk to you, that will be better and less dangerous," she retorted, turning around and leaning over the back of the seat so that she faced the tonneau.

I acquitted her of any deliberate intent, but her action brought her arm so near to mine that it bothered me. I know that I am fussy, but when I am driving I want ample space for my arms to reach down unimpeded for shifting rod or emergency brake. But after her little speech, which I knew was deliberately intended to provoke me, I would not have protested if she had put herself even more in my way than she had.

"Watch Him!" The next minute I was thankful, indeed, for the very watchfulness in Dicky which generally so annoys me. He leaned forward, and with a playful, but, I guessed, firm grip, pulled her to the side of the seat away from me.

"When you realize that ambition of yours and learn to drive, young woman," he drawled, "you'll learn that the driver mustn't be crowded. So restrain those active muscles of yours and exercise your law for awhile. We're all ears for your impressions about driving through the primeval forests at midnight. You ought to be able to say a whole book by the time we get there. You do know a lot of words."

Nothing could be more subtly irritating than Dicky's manner, although I guessed that he was grinning at Bess Dean with apparent admiring ingenuosity. But a tender little smile quirked my lips as I watched the road unfold before me. I knew that his stiletto had reached a vulnerable point in her vanity—she cannot help knowing her own tendency to chatter and to gush, and she knew also that Dicky had spoken to her thus solely because of her catty little speech to me.

It was not the first time that I had known Dicky to do a similar thing. Indeed, I find that he generally punishes and punishes in his own way any slight or impertinence aimed at me. And the knowledge warmed my heart as I sent the car along the winding road.

There was a noisy clatter behind us, and as I instinctively swung the car to the side of the road, I heard Fred whisper, "State trooper, Dad. Watch him pipe these fishing poles!"

South Side Pioneer Ranchers Visit in Omaha

Among the visitors at the stock yards Wednesday were two pioneers of Lexington, who are said to be two of the earliest settlers of Dawson County, H. C. Stuckey and H. O. Smith, better known as "Dobe" Smith.

Mr. Stuckey came to Omaha in 1870, and he said the land upon which the stock yards are located could be bought at that time for $5 an acre. After a year at Omaha he went to Plum Creek, which is now Lexington, which at that time was the head of the Texas cattle drive, when most of the land in the Platte valley west of Kearney was a government free range and thousands of Texas cattle were brought up from the Lone Star state and scattered over the valley for summer feeding.

"I recall," said Mr. Smith, "that back in 1894 times were hard with stock raisers and relief had to be taken out for the winter because of lack of feed. These times seem hard to us because for several years we have been living in abundance."

Mr. Stuckey recently celebrated his golden wedding anniversary and has retired from active part in the cattle business, after having shipped fat cattle to Chicago long before there was a live stock market at Omaha. He, with his two sons, own several farms in the state of Nebraska and one of his sons, Roy, is president of the Lexington state bank.

South Side Motor Cop Raising Small Battalion

George Sheehan, 3314 South Thirty-second avenue, motorcycle officer on the South Side, begged Capt. John E. Briggs for a layoff yesterday, and thereby hangs a tale. Information reached the police station that a 10-pound baby boy had arrived at the Sheehan home yesterday. He is the officer's sixth son.

George telephoned Captain of Police George Allen yesterday afternoon when he was looking forward to the arrival of six more boys in the course of human events and might form a motorcycle battalion, with himself as major, to fight for their country if the United States ever again went to war with a foreign nation.

South Side Brevities

Anton Neppany, tailor, 4923 South Twentieth street, who was arrested early yesterday on complaint of his wife, walked out of court room arm-in-arm with his better half after a lecture given them by Judge Foster.

The Garfield school Parent-Teachers' association will meet tomorrow afternoon at the school when Len Smith, assistant superintendent of schools, will deliver an address. There will be a vocal solo by Miss Zsuzi Case, a reading by Wilma Upchurch, violin and piano duo by Hugh and Paul Winter and piano duo by Cora and Jean Laverty.

Man Robbed of $120 On Street at Midnight

Stephen Cummings, bookkeeper for the Midwest Milk company, was held up shortly after noon yesterday by a negro at Twentieth and Mason streets and robbed of $120 which he was taking to the bank.

The negro wore a cap pulled down over his eyes and held Cummings up by pushing a revolver against his side.

The bandit evidently knew that Cummings takes money to the bank daily at this hour. Before Cummings could give the alarm the negro was out of sight.

Doll Maker to Jail for Nonpayment of Alimony

Fred Prior, maker of kewpie dolls, was again remanded to jail for nonpayment of alimony to his wife, Emily, suing for separate maintenance.

When arraigned before Judge Sears yesterday, Fred had just 3 cents and admitted he was ready for jail. He had a bundle containing his toilet articles.
