Two-Thirds of Vast Fortune Shown by Inventory Just Made Is in Standard Oil Securities.

By HOLLAND. A little under $30,000,000 and a over $29,000,000 are again little over $29,000,000 are again the official inventory of one of the largest estates accumulated in recent years. The authorities have fixed the estate left by Mrs. Helen Bostwick at $29,264,000. All of this estate came to Mrs. Bostwick by inheritance from her husband, Jabez A. Bostwick. He was among the earliest of those who were associated with the Standard Oil company, and of that association.

His fortune, however, as shown by the probate of his estate was considerably less than that accumulated by some of the others who were early with the Standard Oil company. Two of his warm friends, H. H. Rogers and Henry M. Flagler, who was his neighbor at Orient Point on Long Island Sound, accumulated in excess of $40,000,000. The Harkness interests in the Standard Oil company brought a much larger aum than $29,000,000 to them. John D. Archbold accumulated something like $50,000,000 almost all of it by Standard Oil associations. No. one knows exactly how large the fortune accumulated by John D. Rockefeller and his brother, William, now is. of that association.

Great Estates.

Mr. Bostwick's fortune, however, was in the amount of it approximately equation to the fortune accumulated by C. P. Huntington, William C. Whitney, E. C. Converse and a few others. The streat estates accumulated since 1870 have been separated in the smount of the valuation of them by many millions. Jay Gould, James J. Hill, E. H. Harriman, Russel Sage left estates in excess of $75,000,000. There followed estates like that of John D. Archbold and the Harkness interests, also those accumulated by H. H. Flagler and H. H. Rogers of $50,000,000, a little more or a little less. Then the great estates showed another drop down to $23,000,000 or nearly that amount.

The inventory of the Bostwick estate, which has just been made, reports that about $29,000,000 or nearly that amount. The inventory of the Bostwick estate, which has just been made, reports that about $29,000,000 or nearly that amount. The inventory of the Bostwick estate, which has just been made, reports that about $29,000,000 or or stocks although real estate, cash on hand, jewelry are reported in detail.

Bostwick As a Railroad Man.

Bostwick As a Rallroad Man. Bestwick As a Railroad Man.

Yet Mr. Bostwick was at one time conbiderably interested in railroad development, He did not undertake as Mr. Flagler and Mr. Roger did to initiate new railroad enterprises. Into Mr. Rogers' undertaking known as the tide-water railroad about $40,000,000 of his own money was placed. A little more than that was put by Mr. Flagler in his Florida railroad enterprises. But these two Standard Oil

Seeking New York Entrance.

It was determined therefore, to seek a direct entrance to New York by a branch line but it was speedily digeovered that it would be impracticable to find a New York terminal. The cost would be prohibitive. About that time, Mr. McLeed was compelled to abandon his plan. He found himself unable to finance it. The New York and New Haven took advantage of the opportunity and gained everything which McLeed and Bostwick had undertaken to secure. The New Haven secured control of the main line in which Mr. Bostwick was interested and it was named the New York & New England.

Curiously enough the identical purpose which McLeed and Bostwick had in mind and which the New Haven Railroad company carried out only to be restrained afterwards by the Department of Justice has not been warmly approved by government authorities so that ultimately the New England lines may be grouped into a single system. Mr. Bostwick withdrew from this enterprise with restret. It was his single railroad venture. He must have parted with all the securities he bought while endeavoring to carry out this plan because there is no mention of railroad securities in the inventory of the estate which came to his widow after his death and which has within a day or two been probated.

WHY—

Is "Bogus" a Synonym for "Coun-terfeit?"

Originally the American slang equivalent of counterfeit or spurious, "Bogus" slipped into the language through a corruption of the name of a certain Borghese, reputed to have been a corrupt individual who, some time around 1828. The westerners, being rather rapid in their speech, shortened the Italian name of Borghese, first to "Borges" and then to "Bogus," applying the term to counterfeits of all descriptions. I strained my ears to hear sounds of Dicky, Bess Dean or the Cosgroves. But only the distant wail of a hoot owl, the splash of the water below me, disturbed the silence which to me new was awesome instead of restful.

"Surprise? If I stuck it this way and broke my shins against it in the dark some night I'd be surprised, but my language wouldn't be graceful and harmonious."

Jill puckered her pretty brow, and waved to a new position.

More perspiration was the reward for Jack's obedience. He sat down on the filor to study the location and light a cigarette.

"Fine, Jill-girl, except that it cuts off the window light. You couldn't play anything except I'm Afraid to Go Home in the Dark."

"Jack, you haven't an artistic bone in your body!"

"Well, you haven't an artistic bone in your body!"

"Well, you have. Your ancestor Adam sacrificed a rib. That was his little contribution to the culture of womankind."

"Jill twisted a curl the wrong way until it stood out as straight as a sore thumb. This helped her to think. "Honeyboy, don't be discouraged," she said. "Push it in front of the mantel piece, and twist it under this electrolier. Then you can read the music and the melodies will go right into the dining room when we cat."
