Wrinkles: Massage from the base of the neck upward toward the chin and outward toward the ears. Wipe off carefully and go over the throat with ice, which is an excellent astringent and will prevent wrinkles from forming under the chin.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Wild Anxiety in Dicky's Voice and Action. You're sure that's the horn of your car? Pa Cosgrove demanded as the banshee-like wail sounded again through the loneliness of the reservoir road.

He and Fred had stopped abruptly at the sound, and I saw the stretcher which held the wounded state trooper sag limply between them. "Absolutely," I returned shortly, for with the sound had come the conviction that Dicky's hand was sounding the horn. I counted the strokes of the siren. One—two—three. Two short and a long. Yes, it was Dicky's signal. It meant that he and Bess Dean had forsaken the fishing party, and had gone up to the car while I had suffered such deadly peril.

Pa Cosgrove took a hurried step forward. "Who do you suppose is blowing it?" he queried anxiously. "Can it be—" "That's Mr. Graham's signal," I interrupted quickly. "I felt that I could not bear his conjectures longer. So that's all right," Pa Cosgrove commented with a relieved air. "Come, Fred, shake a leg, we've got to make better time with this poor fellow. Ted, give a call, just one, now, so he'll stop that blowing. We don't want to make any more noise than is necessary. You know what mix-up we'll get in on account of this, anyway."

Madge's Suggestion. I put up my hand and fingered the tiny badge of the secret diplomatic service which Lillian had insisted upon my wearing, and blessed the prescience—to my awed imagination almost clairvoyance—which had impelled her insistence. That I was not to the last bend in the path, so the automobile was not visible as yet, and there had been no answering blast of the horn to Ted's clear "Y-o-h-o-o." Suppose Dicky was on that point made me oblivious at first to Pa Cosgrove's answer. It was not until he and Fred set their burden down that I noticed their dilemma.

"Dummed if I know," Mr. Cosgrove said. "Of course, we can get him over, but it's an awful high fence, and the question is how bad we'd hurt him." "Don't you suppose he has keys to the gates in his pockets?" I asked diffidently. "Well, I'll be eternally gin-swizzled!" Pa Cosgrove remarked ruefully. "Just think of all us men waiting around for a woman to think of the keys! Of course, he must have 'em. Will you hold your flashlight, Mrs. Graham? There—that's right!"

"Who's that?" He knelt beside the stretcher, fumbled hastily in the wounded boy's uniform, brought out a bunch of keys, and handed them to Ted. "Run ahead and open the gate," he said, and with the words stooped to the stretcher again and rounded the last turn and had come into view of the gate. As we did so, Dicky's hatless figure vaulted the gate and bounded breathlessly toward us. "Who's hurt?" he demanded rancorously. "Madge! Where is—Oh! there you are!" His voice trailed foolishly, futilely off as he saw me. I guessed the reason. At the sight of the stretcher he had imagined me its occupant, and his natural concern had triumphed over his resentment. But when he had seen me safe, walking beside the Cosgroves, he was embarrassed, masculine fashion, at his own show of anxiety.

"Very much here," I returned airily. "Is Bess all right? We were afraid you were lost." I tried to put just the right amount of casual concern into my voice, but Pa Cosgrove gave Dicky no chance to answer my question. "Now then, Graham, lend a hand, will you?" he asked. "We've got a desperately wounded man here, tell you about when we get inside the car, and we must get him to the nearest house at once. I'll get into the tonneau, and you and Fred and Ted must help me lift the stretcher to the rear seat of the car. If I kneel on the floor I can hold the end which has his feet and legs so his body will rest on the seat. It's going to be a ticklish job, but I think we can manage it."

"I know we can," Dicky said confidently, and I noted that with the sudden emergency he seemed invested with a different spirit than his usual carelessly flippant one. And there was nothing but impersonal crispness in the call he sent toward the car. "Bess! Oh, Bess! Get out of the car, pronto, and open both rear doors. Clear out anything that may happen to be in the tonneau. Wounded man here. Quick, now!"

Things You'll Love To Make. Scarf Collar. A scarf collar is very useful as well as pretty on a fall blouse. Cut a stole-shaped collar of the same material as the blouse. Line it with silk of a contrasting color. Finish the ends with beads and tassels. Fasten the lower back edge to the back of the neck band. You can then wear your blouse low-necked or throw the scarf collar about your neck, pin it at the back and have a jaunty high collar with the ends hanging coquettishly down the back.

To clean bed springs dip an old dish mop in kerosene oil, wring it out and work it around in each small space of the springs. It will save your hands many a scratch, remove the dust and at the same time prevent the springs from rusting.

In a Hospital.

Nurses are always annoyed by the practice of visitors in secreting into the hospital rooms and wards various sorts of candies, smokes and goodies. The visitors who do this are for the most part ignorant folk who fancy that because the patients are not getting just what suits their palate most they are being neglected.

After visitors' day in the wards there is always a large "haul" of confiscated dainties that range all the way from pretzels to chewing tobacco that have been left by kindly disposed visitors with their sick friends. It may be that you are one of those persons whose interest and curiosity are greatly enticed by a visit to the hospital. You may wish to know just why the man in the next room or ward bed is moaning and you may be consumed with curiosity to know the details of your own friend's operation. But suppress your curiosity. On pain of seeming indifferent don't ask questions, and if your friend begins to talk about these things remember that such morbid thoughts are never beneficial.

Musicians Demand the Grand. The piano used on every concert platform is a grand. The piano used with every symphony orchestra is a grand. Why this universal preference for the grand among the great musicians? Because of one thing and one thing only—the superiority of its tone. The tone of the grand piano is pure, from a piano free and untrifled. The grand type of piano is now available in small size for the small room.

The Brambach Baby Grand will bring the perfection of piano type into your home at a modest price. Durable Built Classic Design Equivocal Tone Full Guarantee. Price $695. The Brambach Baby Grand is a more room than an upright. A tissue paper pattern free upon request, will show this when spread up on the floor.
