HE beautiful Howard Baldrige home was a Tiffany's in miniature yesterday when the wedding gifts to Miss Regina Connell and Mal-colm Baldrige, who were married Wednesday evening at the Blackstone, were on display. Choice silver and the finest of linens in a bewildering array of kind and design were shown in Mrs. Baldrige's blue room. Partic-ular comment was made by guests on the antique silver kettle and an antique silver side dish, the latter a gift from Mary Jordan, noted contralto;

also on the silver tea set and after dinuer coffees.

Mirrors suggesting a veritable "Palace of Mirrors" hung on the walls and soft glows came from the many handsome table and boudoir lamps be-

In the noteworthy collection of pictures was one of the bride herself, painted by Mrs. Herbert Gannet, formerly Mable Taylor. It was a true likeness of a lovely subject.

Wonderful clocks, exquisite oriental rugs, china, glass and electric appliances were in almost endless variety. An outstanding gift was from the humblest member of the Baldrige household, "Ginger," the dog. Ginger was practical. He chose something which might be dealt with harshly in the early housekeeping days, a set of attractive but quite serviceable china. "To the Bride and Groom," from Ginger Baldrige, read the rather large letters on the rather large card.

Among those assisting Mrs. Baldrige informally were Mrs. E. A. Pegau, Mrs. Ed Creighton and Mrs. Alvin Johnson.

She has been engaged twice and is even now hesitating between two men who appear to be almost equally A now hesitating between two men who appear to be almost equally desirable. One is young, interesting, has a fine future, but it stubborn and opinionated. The other is 20 years older than she, but has every possible advantage of mind and social position and worldly qualification. She wants to marry, but can't choose between her suitors.

Philip is 31 and lonely. He is making enough money to support a wife of simple tastes and home-making instincts. He believes in women and feels that he ought to sacrifice every bit as much as he would ask a girl to give up. He's thought three times in as many years that he had found the right girl. But somehow none of them would do. He's almost made up his mind to marry a clever widow with an income almost equal to his own and a desire to form what she thinks would be an advantageous partnership. But Philip is still haunted by thoughts of the "golden girl"—the girl for whom he'd like to work and suffer if need be. Both of them come to me and ask me what I would do were I in a

Love is the thing most normal

Love is the thing most normal human beings crave. Love is the clue to happiness for almost every one. But love is the most devastating and disappointing thing that can come into many lives.

The condition of civilization keep us from expressing ourselves naturally. From childhood we have to repress and inhibit. After a while we don't know what we want — and what we have been trained to think we want. And the reason so few of us know love when we so few of us know love when we see it, or keep it when we get it into our power, is because most of us don't know ourselves and don't

Our world centers about ourselves. We don't give love—but long to get it. We don't wonder how to serve love, but how to make it serve us.

There's nothing to condemn in this unless we're going to condemn all of the scheme of things. But there is something to do about it.
