My Marriage Problems "Revelations of a Wife" (Copyright, 1931, by Newspaper Feature

What Is the Reason for Colonel Travers' Request to Meet Lillian? Hold the wire, please," I sent the crisp req est into the transmitter and turned to Colonel Travers. "Captain Hastings is on the wire, Colonel Travers. Do you wish to speak to him?"

"What does he want?" The words came from lips that were actually stiff with thwarted anger. "He says that Crowley recovered consciousness for a minute and identified Smith as his assailant. Captain Hastings thinks Crowley has a good deal more to tell, but he is unconscious again."

"Thank you." His tone was the mechanical one of a man so trained to perfunctory courtesy that he never forgets it, even when-as was patent now-he did not know he was speaking. With two strides he reached my side, took the receiver from my hands and began to speak, "He Must Not Get Far!" "Hastings? Round everybody up you can get hold of by telephone or elegraph, send description of Smith, have police in every section watch these
