

Society

There are parties and parties. You may ask your friends in to play bridge, or you may invite them to go for an airplane ride, but Mr. and Mrs. Frank Selby have wireless parties at their home on Thirty-first avenue. Last Friday evening they entertained a party to hear Phillip Gordon, who was giving a recital at the Burgess-Nash tea room. Their guests were Miss Marian Weller, Miss Hilda Eberhardt, Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Norton, Wallace Shephard, Loring Elliott and Tom Norris.

The Selbys have been studying the code diligently since they installed their receiving apparatus, but to enjoy music one does not have to be an expert at the speedy dots and dashes. The music was relayed to the various people "listening in" by the Bell telephone line. An ordinary telephone transmitter was placed near the piano, and Ronald Rockwell, in Dundee, transferred it by his wireless sender, after which it could be picked up by any one with a wireless receiver.

Mrs. Selby says that almost any evening if they listen between 10 and 10:30 they can hear music sent out by the Reynolds Radio station in Denver, and frequently they hear concerts in Pittsburgh sent out by the Westinghouse company. They find their "wireless concerts" so fascinating that Mrs. Selby says they frequently forget evening engagements and stay at home with their ears glued to the receiver.

Problems That Perplex
Answered by BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

Christmas Gift.
Dear Miss Fairfax: Will you please answer my letter through your column in The Bee? I am a young lady 22 years old. I have been keeping company with a young man whom I care for very much, and I believe he cares for me. Two years ago Christmas he gave me a beautiful ivory miniature set, but I did not give him anything in return, and he had a little misunderstanding just before Christmas, and when he sent me my Christmas present I sent him a letter by return mail saying, "If he would call at once I would return his Christmas gift; but he came and he begged me to keep it and said it was not much and not half as much as I was worthy of being given, especially by him."

Well, time runs on until just about a year ago when we failed to be together for over two months, and in the meantime he did not give me a Christmas present, nor I didn't give him any. So this spring we started going together again, and have been together three or four times every week up until about two months ago, when he went away. I hear from him every week and he seems to care for me, and I know it will be Christmas time, and not knowing whether or not he will give me anything or not, I feel as though I should like to send him a little gift. Just what should it be?

How would my picture be? And do you suppose it would make him feel awfully bad if I send him something and he hasn't sent me something? He is in California, and it takes about four or five days to get a letter or package to him. Will you please answer me at once and let me know your advice?
—BETTY EYES.

THE MARRIAGE LAW.
Dear Miss Fairfax: This is an argument that cannot be settled between the young folks of our community, so we leave it to you. When a young man takes a girl for a ride and they visit for a while in the car upon their return to the girl's home, which should suggest time for departure?
Does a girl who was 15 years old before the law was passed need her parents' consent to secure a marriage license? Is this the same in all states and in all counties of this state?
Hoping to see this in The Bee.
—M. D. T.

Day Nursery on a Permanent Basis

That Omaha shall not be without the "Day Nursery," but that it shall be permanently maintained so long as it can be financed was definitely decided at the regular monthly meeting of the executive committee held Monday.

Much encouragement has been received from friends of the cause. Some financial assistance has already been given; the W. C. T. U. has donated a supply of jelly; Mrs. A. Treston has furnished clothing for the children, and a friend as far away as New York has sent $20.

Even children are supporting the Day Nursery. Little Chatham Redick, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. C. Redick, while overhearing her mother read of the possible necessity of closing the Day Nursery quietly slipped away and got her "bank," containing her savings of $2.19, and said, "Mamma, take my money; it will run the Day Nursery for a long time."

A Christmas tree celebration has been planned by the committee for the day before Christmas. Gifts of toys, mittens, stockings and other articles contributing to the success thereof will be greatly appreciated.

Mrs. Charles T. Kountze was elected chairman of the courtesy committee.

Third Exhibit of Paintings at Library

The third of a series of paintings will be shown at the Omaha public library under the auspices of the Omaha Society of Fine Arts, from December 6 (opening yesterday) until January 6.

This exhibit includes 45 paintings by William J. Potter of the Broadmoor Art academy, and 25 by Charles W. Hawthorne, head of the Cape Cod School of Painting. Many of Mr. Potter's collection were painted in Europe, and include Spanish castles and homes, English scenes and several of the coast of Massachusetts. This collection has just been shown at the Rochester galleries.

Mrs. E. M. Morsman, jr., is chairman of hostesses. She is assisted Tuesday by Mesdames Frank Judson, Ralph Kewitt, Harry Kelly and Henry Knox. Mrs. A. K. Meader will be in charge Wednesday and Thursday; Mrs. F. A. Nash Friday and Saturday, and Mrs. C. M. Wilhelm, chairman of the exhibit committee, will be hostess on Sunday afternoons from 2 until 6 o'clock. The exhibit, which is open to the public, is open every week day from 9 a. m. until 9 p. m.

My Marriage Problems

Adelle Garrison's New Phase of "REVELATIONS OF A WIFE"

The Way Bess Dean Gave Dicky "His Chance."
Well! Pa Cosgrove drawled as we left the lights of the Kronish inn behind us, "that was some party I don't know when I've been so turned upside down or so scared either. I'll be glad to tumble into bed. I don't know about the rest of you."

"What about the fish and the poles?" Fred asked solemnly. "Heavens! Bess Dean's laugh had a lit of scorn in it. 'You surely don't want to go back for those fish tonight, after all this excitement.' 'We came a long way down here after them,' Fred retorted stubbornly, 'and I know Ma's expecting to cook them for breakfast.' 'When they're getting ready to bury Fred,' his father remarked reflectively, 'it'll be dollars to doughnuts that the news of a good run of fish somewhere will resurrect him. But if the ladies don't want to stop tonight, Fred, you'll just have to—' 'I should be very glad to wait while you go after the fish, Fred,' I interrupted with a vivid, grateful memory of what the sly, honest had done for me only a few minutes before, 'but Mr. Graham's head ought to be attended to as soon as possible.'"

"Will You Ever Forget?"
Bess Dean turned in her seat so that she faced Dicky. "How do you like acting as a scales balance for a mess of fish?" she gibed and I knew she meant Dicky to understand that she thought me most callous toward his injury. But I, who have studied my husband's every mood and foible, knew that nothing would so anger him as for me to make a fuss in public over the injury which he himself had declared was of no consequence. 'I'd like the fish a darned sight better,' Dicky answered. 'Now Madge, for the love of Pete don't begin to fuss over this scratch on my head. You know we've had more scraps over your trying to take care of me when I'm sick than over anything else. And I vote for the fish. My head will wait, but the fish won't. So, Fred, you just toddle down and get them. There's the gate now. Want any help?' 'I'll go down with him,' Mr. Cosgrove said hastily, as I stopped the car in front of the gate through which we had borne the wounded state trooper so short a time before. 'We can manage everything, and we won't be long—if you're sure your head—' 'If everybody doesn't stop lugging my head into the conversation, Dicky declared irritably, 'allice same, Mr. Dick, with the bean of Charles the First, I'll—' 'Don't be cross,' Bess Dean cooed. 'It's because we all love you so that we're anxious about your poor head. Oh! isn't this moonlight glorious? Will you ever forget that wonderful walk we had through the woods to-night Dicky bird?'"

What Dicky Told.
If I had not realized that she was deliberately trying to goad me into an undignified exhibition of jealousy, I am afraid I would have betrayed the flame of anger which was consuming me at her tone and manner to Dicky, which would have sounded silly in a fiancée or a newly wedded wife, and which from her was not only ridiculous but offensive. I waited Dicky's answer tensely, and when it came I had hard work to keep from hugging myself with glee. 'I'll tell the world I'll never forget it!' Dicky drawled, and the drowsiness of his tone suggested anything but pleasurable recollections of the walk to which she had referred so saccharinely. 'Believe me, that's a stroll that will linger in my memory!'"

"You know Madge," he bent forward with a confidential air, and with secret glee I noticed that Mr. Cosgrove and Fred were taking their time about getting over the fence, putting over some imaginary difficulty in order to keep within earshot of my husband, "this damsel," he drawled the syllables atrociously, almost insultingly, "this burzoon friend of yours shouldn't be allowed loose in the moonlight. It seems to plumb loco her. She appeared to have all her five senses, and was fishing away like the rest of us until the moon came up. Then nothing would do her but she must stroll a bit along the shore. And then she began discovering 'fascinating vistas,' which simply must be explored to see how the moon dappled the tree trunks, and so forth. 'If I had foreseen this moonlit madness on the part of the lady I would have laden my pocket with balls of twine and paid them out at each vista, so we could find our way back again. As it was, about the third tree we got lost, and the evening was then just one damned vista after another until we finally reached the state road and tramped down it to the car just before you arrived on the scene. Moonlight! Vistas! Every one knows I adore you, fair spouse, but if you propose strolling in the moonlight for at least three moons to come I'll—lead you to the ravens!'"

Eat FLEISCHMANN'S YEAST for health
Builds up system, acts on intestines. Makes you fit and keeps you fit.
Eat two to three cakes daily.
Fleischmann's Yeast is a food—not a medicine.
Avoid the use of so-called yeast preparations. Many of these contain only a small amount of yeast—as little as one-tenth of a yeast cake—mixed with drugs or medicines. The familiar tin-foil package with the yellow label is the only form in which you can get Fleischmann's Yeast for Health. Be sure it's Fleischmann's fresh Yeast. Do not be misled by yeast-substitutes.
