

CHAPTER L

A Big Little Pony. When Johnnie Green sent him along the road at a trot, Twinkle- out the slightest warning. If he debeels' tiny feet moved so fast that cided to shy at a bit of paper he was you could scarcely have told one out of the road before Johnnie Green from another. Being a pony, and only half as big as a horse, he had to move his legs twice as quickly as a horse did in order to travel at a horse's speed. Twinkleheels' friends knew that he didn't care to be beaten said that he was as quick as Miss by any horse, no matter how long- Kitty Cat. And that was the same

"It's spirit, not size, that counts," any quicker—unl Farmer Green often remarked as he But Twinklehr watched [Twinkleheels tripping out

ey said they liked high spirits, but Twinkleheels was almost too playful the yard, sometimes with Johnnie on his back, sometimes drawing Johnnie in a little, red-wheeled Oldedog Spot agreed with Farmer When Twinkleheels first came to live on the farm Spot had thought him something of a joke. "Huh! This pony's nothing but a toy," he had told the farmyard folk. "He's a child's plaything-about as much use as the little wooly dog that lives down by the sawmill."

One trip to the village and back, behind Johnnie Green's glistening new buggy was enough to change Spot's opinion of the newcomer. Back from the village Twinkleheeis came clipping up the road and swung through Farmer Green's front gate as fresh as a daisy. And old Spot, with his tongue lolling out, and panting fast, was glad to lie down on the woodshed step to rest. "My goodness!" said Spot to Miss Kitty Cat. "This Twinkleheels is the goingest animal I ever followed. He doesn't seem to know the difference between uphill and down. It's all the same to him. I did think he'd walk now and then, or I'd never have traveled to the village behind him.' "He's not lazy, like some people," Miss Kitty Cat hissed; and then into the farmhouse before Spot could chase her. She had a poor opinion of old Spot. And she never failed to let him know it.

It was true that Twinkleheels was not lavy. And it was just as true that he liked to play. When Johnnie Green turned him loose in the pasture he kicked and frisked about so gayly that Jimmy Rabbit and Billy Woodchnek and their friends had to step lively, now and then, to get out of his way, They said they liked high spirits, but that Twinkleheels was almost too playful. When Twinkleheels took it into his head to do anything he did it withas saying that there wasn't anybody any quicker-unless it was Grumpy

But Twinkleheels and Miss Kitty were not alike in any other way, for Twinkleheels was both merry and good-natured. He let Johnnie Green pick up his feet, one at a time, and clean them. And the worst he ever did was to give Johnnie a playful nip, just as Johnnie himself might have pinched the bey that sat in front of him at school

Only, of course, Johnnie Green wouldn't have used his teeth to do
